Again on The "Blink"

We don't know why, but the lighting system which we are supposed to get from the Southern Light and Power Company at Hudson again went bad on Wednesday evening long enough to cause the Advocate considerable damage and to delay publication for one day. Sometimes we believe a most serious blunder was made when our little local plant was ripped out and sold for junk prices. But of course its a mere bagatelle to worry over.

We don't know who the big noise behind the lights is, but he could just "waller" in glory if he could repair these little breaks in the current 15 minutes after they occur. If this continues we shall carry a lantern.

What you GET here
depends on what you GIVE here

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen, or by a test with your own cows.

WOMAN SO ILL WASHED DISHES SITTING DOWN

Mrs. Ashcroft's Remarkable Recovery After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Covington, Ky.—"I was so weak and nervous I could hardly do my housework as I could not stand because of the bearing-down pains in my back and abdomen. I sat down most of the time and did what I could do in that way—as washing dishes, etc. One day a book describing Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines was put in my mail-box. I saw how the Vegetable Compound had helped others so I gave it a trial. I had to take about a dozen bottles before I gained my strength but I certainly praise this medicine. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood medicine for poor blood. I was cold all the time. I would be so cold I could hardly sit still and in the palms of my hands there would be drops of sweat. I also used the Sanative Wash and I recommend it also. You may publish this letter and I will gladly answer letters from women and advise my neighbors about these medicines."—Mrs. HARRY ASHCROFT, 632 Beech Avenue, Covington, Kentucky.

Ma and Pa Decide Old Home Is O. K.

Aged Parents, Anticipating Happiest Year, Refuse New Bungalow.

By EMILY BURKS ADAMS

THE train was later than usual. Mrs. Owen often looked at her watch and asked the conductor if they were making up any time.

"New Year's Day, and still on the train, when we were due at Oklahoma City last night! Mother will be so disappointed that we're not there, Bob."

"Well dear, she knows the train is late."

"Yes, Bob, but the knowledge of a thing doesn't keep it from being disappointing; I'm so tired, too; I can hardly wait until I get there."

"Just think of the wonderful gift we have for them and how happy we are going to make them, dear—a nice little home by us. We'll have them always with us, Madge."

"Oh! Bob, you're just wonderful! Father will be delighted with Chicago and mother will enjoy her new home."

The train puffed into Oklahoma City. The first person Madge and Bob saw was Father Canton, leaning on his cane, looking up and down the vast throngs as they gayly hurried by.

Oh, there he is, Bob! I can't wait to tell him of our plans. This will be my happiest New Year—taking them home with us.

"Father, so glad to see you! How is mother?" Madge shouted.

"Howdy, Bob. Howdy. Oh, mother's as fine as a fiddle; dinner's all on the table. Don't think she went to bed last night; she was just sure you'd had a wreck."

"I knew, dad, she'd be uneasy. Oh! we have the best present for you. We—"

"I hope it's a suit of clothes—I need one," interrupted Mr. Canton.

All laughed. They took a cab and were soon at the old home.

"My, mother, how good the turkey smells! We're so hungry and travel weary, but before we eat, or anything, I want to tell you about your new home Bob and I bought for you—right next to us. We're going to take you back with us. You can sell this place later. Bob and I have it all furnished for you.

"Bob, you carve the turkey," said Mr. Canton; "Madge has taken my breath. What's the matter? I think you're crazy instead of wild, Madge! How long has she been this way, Bob?"

"But, father, you'll go; of course you will. This place is old, and we want to take care of you."

"Now, see here, children; not while I have two feet and this cane to lean on. Ma and I were never happier in our lives. We'll take you and Bob in. We're able to take care of ourselves."

"You won't go, mother, father?"

In one voice they said—"No."

A happy week was spent together but Bob and Madge returned alone to see the new bungalow instead of the old home place.

"Well, Bob, I don't know but that the folks are right and as they said: This may be the happiest year of their lives. Happiness comes from within, and now that I know they are so attached to that place I shall not worry about them. I just hope that when we are in our eighties we'll love each other and our home just as much as they love theirs—I have an idea we'll tell our children just as they told us—that they are crazy. True, I suppose, you can't transplant old people."

Things We Forgot During Past Year

Let Others Remember Our Good Deeds—It Is the Better Way.

By MARTHA BANNING THOMAS

VERY likely many of the things we have forgotten during the past year, are the things that other people remember best. It generally works by the law of opposites.

Thus: "I never got so much comfort out of anything in my life as that warm waist you gave me; cold mornings it's as good as a fire."

"What warm waist?" you answer, puzzled. "Why, that dark blue one you gave me; don't you remember?" says the young married woman who has four children and lives up the back road from your village.

No, you can't remember, but you're glad she's got it.

And thus: "Say, you saved my life that day when you picked me up on the road."

"What day?"

"That drizzling, cold, raw afternoon last winter. I'd been shopping downtown and started to walk home, because it's an actual fact I'd spent every cent before I knew it, and hadn't even a car fare. I was just about done up, when you hailed me and asked me to get in your car. I never was so glad to see anyone in my life!"

And thus: "I've read that book you gave me five times and now I'm on my fifth."

"What book?"

"That book of poems you sent me when I was so sick. I like poetry but don't feel as though I ought to spend money on it; sort of selfish when there's so much want in the world. But I tell you, those lovely lines keep singing in my head and are like meat and drink to me."

You can't recollect to save your life about that book, but you are grateful for the dear old lady's words.

WHY NOT STRIVE TO MAKE 1925 A YEAR OF GOOD DEEDS FORGOTTEN BY OURSELVES AND REMEMBERED BY OTHERS?

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

Doubtful

"Some folks," said Uncle Eben, "will have a happy New Year, and others will jes' barely manage to git over Christmas."

The New Year

By Edith Livingston Smith

THE New Year—where it leads and whom concerning
We cannot see,
We scan the path and full our hearts of yearning
And mystery—
What will it yield, this lane of sudden turning,
To you and me?

Grant we may find our share of sunlight streaming—
Come tears—come mirth;
Where faith in man shall make life's good deeds seeming
Of noble worth;
Give days our toil and give our nights
sweet dreaming,
God of the earth.

Give us the heart to tread the way, not knowing
A vale or height;
Give us of cheer that God, His grace bestowing,
May guide us right;
Grant we may love the others with us going—
Old Year—Good night!

Long, Long Ago

In the heyday of its popularity New Year's day was the day of the year on which all gentlemen were expected to call and offer congratulations to each of their lady acquaintances. Clergymen were at home on this day; likewise bridegrooms, who on the first New Year's after marriage received callers with their respective brides. It was the spirit of the day to offer hospitality lavishly and to receive it equally lavishly. Even the employees of a gentleman were permitted to pay their respects and to eat and drink with the ladies of the household. On principle the old-fashioned New Year's was beautifully democratic.—New York Times.

The Tables Turned

"Does your wife still give you Christmas cigars?"

"No," answered Mr. Meekton. "I overheard Henrietta making fun of the cigarettes with which I presented her."

Self-love offended never forgives.

Virginia Lands valued at 40% less per acre produce crops worth 62% more than average for the United States, as shown by the statistical records. You can buy Virginia Land at 30% to 40% lower price per acre and receive practically 62% more net money for your crops. On account of Virginia being closer to big Eastern Markets better prices are secured, less freight. The Automobile Tax Question

The question of 1925 auto taxes is getting on the nerves of the public to the extent that they want to know what they have got to put up for the use of a car to finance the program of road building which is taking the attention of most of the country today.

At Lansing there is not much doing and chances are good for a deadlock same as before on the law when it comes up for consideration. Gov. Groesbeck has not quite explained his attitude on the gas tax—in fact he talks one way and then he talks the other way for a while and nobody seems to be getting anywhere.

The levying of a horsepower tax and a weight tax has disadvantages, because there is no unit of use that applies equally to any motor vehicle as a basis for the distribution of taxes. One may own a heavy car or a high powered car and pay a tax thereupon which is so disproportionate to that levied upon a lighter and lower powered car that individual members of either class of owners may beat other individual members of either class in the amount of value that they get out of their tax. The heavy car owner may do less driving and accumulate less mileage on his ponderous vehicle to furnish wear for the roads than the owner of the lighter powered car, in which event he is paying more than his share of the tax; or, he may keep his heavy machine going all the time and get more than his share of the wear on the roads.

So far as the gasoline tax is concerned, we have, heretofore, in this paper, maintained that gasoline used in the arts and industries other than that used for motive power, should not be taxed for road support; but later statistics on the proportion between the volume of gasoline used in the arts and that used for motive power on the roads shows that it is negligible and that no very great harm is going to come to anybody using gasoline in the arts even if it is taxed. That question aside, really the most equable distribution of burdens of road building and maintenance can be worked out by a gasoline tax, provided it is the sole tax, producing great revenue, and is not an addition to other taxes based upon weight and horse power.

Although the Detroit Automobile Club has been recorded as planning to take action to force the state into issuing the 1925 license plates at once, Gov· Alex J. Groesbeck announces that the differences have been ironed out and that the club instead will cooperate with the state and not oppose the delay in selling the licenses until after the legislature meets

Who gets closer to life than a doctor? What other person comes more directly into daily contact with its romance, its hopes and defeats, its sordidness and its uplifting qualities? Who else has the drama of it all so constantly before his eyes?

This strange tale, eerie and mystifying in part, but filled with passionate interest and charm is the romance of a surgeon. Its heroine is a nurse. Its strongest scenes are in a sanitarium. One of its most effective climaxes takes place at an operating table. Edifying and thrilling; a story that engages the mind and the heart and does not permit interest to lapse for an instant. One of the most unusual and satisfactory of Victor Rousseau's many remarkable stories.

Dr. Olin Repudiates Sajous

In "Analytic Cyclopedia of Practical Medicine" by Sajous occurs the following in regard to immunizing infants. Dr. Olin takes exception to the following recommendation for treatment of infants:

"All infants below 12, and if possible below 18 months of age should, the writer thinks, be actively immunized with 3 doses, each 10 c. c. of toxin-antitoxin. These injections should be given irrespective of the Schick test the infants may show at the time of immunization. The injections are given subcutaneously in the arm or below the angle of the scapula, and repeated every seven days. The toxin-antitoxin is well tolerated by young infants, and for that reason the dose advised is the same as that given to older children. The relatively larger dose of toxin-antitoxin will, of course, also give rise to a better immunizing response. All children over 18 months of age, as well as all youths and adults, should be tested with the Shick reaction first, and only those giving a positive reaction immunized with toxin-antitoxin. Three injections, each 10 c. c. are given subcutaneously, one week apart."

The doctor says:

"Under no circumstances should the toxin-antitoxin mixture, which is now distributed, be given in the doses recommended as it would be a dosage of more than one M. L. D. of diphtheria toxin, which would cause severe reactions and in all probability necrosis of the tissue, and might open the way for secondary infections.

The United States Public Health Service, to our knowledge has approved no toxin-antitoxin to be given in 10 c. c. doses. The weekly intervals until three doses have been given,"

M. A. C. Soil Testing Outfit Is Improved

The Soiltex outfit for testing the acidity of soils, known to thousands of Michigan farmers as a practical means of making a survey of their agricultural lands from the point of view of lime needs, has been simplified and improved by the soils department at the M. A. C.

The outfits, which are said to contain enough material for 100 tests, are distributed to the farmers of the state at cost, which is now but twenty five cents.

The history of the development of the modern Soiltex equipment by Prof. C. H. Spurway, of M. A. C. forms an interesting chapter in the annals of agricultural improvement. The first commercial sets for soil testing cost around twenty dollars, according to specialists at the college. Use of the Soiltex equipment enables a farmer at very low cost to determine exactly whether or not his soil needs lime, and how heavy an application is necessary, thus saving much blind and expensive treatment.

Cleaning Tourist Camps

An exceedingly large portion of the population of Michigan are known to be nomadic in their habits, as soon as summer begins inasmuch as they travel from place to place by automobile during the season, and as it is not always possible to give these tourist camps a sewage system, non sanitation often develops serious conditions. In the course of a few weeks these camps become polluted with all kinds of filth, and in view of so many different classes of folks who travel the roads and those following are more or less apt to suffer diseases of both contageous and infectious nature. Michigan has devised a splendid scheme of sending out a traveling laboratory mounted on a truck chassis which visits the different summer resort camps during the season and analizes their condition, thus ferreting out all dangerous epidemics before they have a chance to become general.

Before the advent of the automobile, many resorts were maintained for people who liked the wilderness, and these were kept in fair sanitary condition. To meet the present demand, however permanent camps of every description have been erected, some, it is true complying with regulations concerning tourists or auto camps. safe to say, however, that no state has sufficient machinery to cope with the existing situation.

In this report, it is taken for granted that the prevalent unsanitary conditions of resorts and camping places is admitted, and that a wide spread menace exists to the health of the people who take their vacations via auto camps or at unsanitary resorts, and also to the people who live in the communities to which filth is brought and left uncared for.

Each state and province was asked to send your chairman its laws and regulations regarding tourists, vacations and resorts. The usual reply was that there were no specific laws or regulations. As has already been stated, only 16 states have such codes and most of these specify merely what sanitary precautions should be used. The specifications of only a few states are adequate,—the state of Florida having perhaps the best.

Dr. Luckett of New Mexico suggests traveling inspectors who would go from state to state camping with the tourists. Several states, he thinks, might cooperate in paying their expenses with the assistance also of the U. S. Public Health service on the grounds that we have to do with an inter-state problem.

Information and instruction given to all tourists on entrance into the state, either by inspectors or state police.

Resorts may be divided into five main classes: 1st. The modern summer hotel. 2nd. The summer cottage colony. 3rd. Permanent tent colony. 4th. Temporary camps. 5. Auto tourist camp. Resorts in the first class are usually managed by individuals who realize the importance and value of sanitary conditions and are glad to take advice from health department officials. They may be readily kept in good condition by surveys, advice and follow-up visits, such as are made by Connecticut and Indiana, or by visits from a traveling laboratory, such as is employed in Michigan. Scoring of resorts is thought to be an aid in some states

State Fights Chicago's Drainage Canal Grab

Attorney General Daugherty, of Michigan, presented the State's argument against the Chicago drainage canal water diversion policy at the hearing before the U. S. Supreme Court at Washington this week. He declared that the levels of all the Great Lakes except Superior, had been disastrously affected by the 10,000 foot diversion at Chicago.

Calling attention to the fact that the diversion at Chicago was almost equal to the combined volume of water brought into Lake Michigan by three of its chief tributaries, he said that the rights of all the citizens in the lake states outside of Illinois has been flouted by the city of Chicago for the sole benefit of its own citizens.

"The state of Michigan claims every foot of water along its coast subject only to federal control for navigation purposes," he said. Chicago is usurping the rights of the citizens of Michigan when it takes 10,000 cubic feet of water per second from Lake Michigan through the drainage canal.

Mr. Daugherty told the court that traffic had already been greatly damaged on the Great Lakes and that the iron ore industry had been seriously affected by the lowering of the lake levels.

James D. Beck, U. S. solicitor general, presented the arguments against the diversion in behalf of the government.

COOLIDGE BACKS MELLON SCHEME

Would Regard Republican Success in November as "Mandate" to Repeal Present Law.

WOULD FAVOR MILLIONAIRES

President Still Wants Reduction of Surtaxes on Big Incomes, and Opposes Estate Taxes and Publicity of Returns.

Washington, D. C. — Republican success at the polls on November 4 would be regarded by President Coolidge as a "mandate" to substitute the "Mellon plan" of taxation for the present Democratic law and thus deprive small taxpayers of the generous reduction in taxes they now enjoy and instead give most of the benefits to the millionaires and billionaires Mr. Coolidge and his Secretary of the Treasury have frankly favored in the past.

Partisan Republican newspapers, evidently speaking with inspiration from the White House, have repeatedly published the statement that Mr. Coolidge's election and Republican control of Congress will be the signal for a revision of the new Democratic tax law and the enactment in its stead of the Mellon scheme. The President's own language in his statement accompanying his approval of the Garner-Simmons (Democratic) bill is taken to justify the prediction made by Republican newspapers.

Mr. Coolidge declared his opposition to the surtax rates, running to 40 per cent, to the estate tax of 40 per cent., and to publicity for income tax returns, among other provisions of the bill, and asserted that the measure did not "represent a sound and permanent tax policy." In all the objections he raised against the new law, Mr. Coolidge explained, Secretary Mellon concurred with him.

Harvey's Paper Hints Plan

The Washington Post, whose editor in chief is George B. Harvey, is regarded as the most knowing spokesman of the White House on political subjects. This paper on June 4, two days after President Coolidge reluctantly signed the new bill, published a news article in which appeared the following paragraph:

"The statement [sent to Congress by Mr. Coolidge] is accepted as a declaration by the President of an election issue, and in this regard it is considered likely that if a Republican Congress is elected and Mr. Coolidge is returned to the White House, he will call a special session of the new Congress after next March 4."

What President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon demanded of Congress was a reduction of the surtaxes on the incomes of millionaires from a maximum of 50 per cent. to a maximum of only 25 per cent., thus cutting the taxes of those with incomes of $60,000 and more by many thousands a year at the expense of the smaller taxpayers. This is shown by the fact that the "Mellon Plan," if adopted as its author and Mr. Coolidge urged, would have benefited 610 income taxpayers more than the Democratic bill, while the latter has actually brought substantial relief to 6,656,067 persons more than the Mellon scheme would have benefited.

Scheme President Favors

The reduction of 50 per cent. in the surtaxes on an income of $5,000,000, advocated by President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon, would have meant a saving of $1,300,000 to that lone taxpayer. At the same time, had their plan been adopted, the saving to 1,666 taxpayers with an average income of $3,000 a year each, aggregating $5,000,000, would have been only $25,000. The Mellon scheme with which the President wants Congress to replace the present Democratic law, would have saved more money to a taxpayer with an income of $100,000 a year—and there are upwards of a thousand in this class—than it would have saved to 60 taxpayers whose incomes averaged $10,000 each.

Small taxpayers who are now getting the benefit of tax reductions given to them by the Democrats of Congress have a special interest in defeating President Coolidge and Republican Senators and Representatives at the election in November. The powerful interests which have been attempting to force the Mellon plan on the people will succeed if Mr. Coolidge and a Republican majority in the Senate and the House are chosen. It was only the Democrats, with assistance from certain western Progressives, that prevented the enactment of the Mellon scheme in the recent session of Congress.

These millionaires and billionaires for whom President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon have fought so hard in the last fourteen months could well afford to spend millions to control the elections in November. The saving they could thus obtain through the reduction of their normal and surtaxes at the expense of thousands of smaller taxpayers would make their contributions to Republican success a fine investment.

MASTER FORGERS' TRICKS EXPOSED

The "Perfect Forgery" Always Has a Weak Spot That Leads to Penman's Downfall.

NATIONWIDE DRAGNET OUT

Bankers Working Together to Catch Crooks Who Cause Losses of $150,000,000 With Bad Checks Yearly.

A bogus check scheme that was so original, sound and business-like that it became known in detective circles as "the one perfect forgery," but finally, like all of them, led to its own inventor being trapped, is described by Reuben A. Lewis, Jr., in the American Bankers Association Journal. The article, which says forgeries cost the banks and business concerns at least $150,000,000 a year, deals with the ways of forgers and the relentless warfare being conducted against them by the bankers.

"Crime does not pay," Mr. Lewis says. "Soon the law reaches out and seizes the misguided operator who thinks he can get away with it. For one of the peculiar things about the forger is that, while he may devise a clever scheme that brings a rich return on its initial trial, he continues to work it until caught.

"Fortunately, there appears to be a weak spot in the best laid scheme. And just as soon as this weak spot is uncovered, it is broadcast to all the banks in the land. So the banks, informed as to the method of approach that the forger will make, and the little peculiarities of the job, are on the alert to nab him when he makes his next reappearance.

The King of Forgers

"The 'master forger' is William Hamilton Harkins, probably the most dangerous operator known to the banking world. Several times in the toils of the law, Harkins has managed to escape. The daring 'king' of the forgers made a confession that he had defrauded banks of more than $300,000 during the years of his career.

"His scheme follows a certain set pattern. The key to Harkins' plan is obtaining a blank check from the checkbook of a well known firm. Recently Harkins sauntered into the office of a granite dealer. He ordered a monument and tendered a check for a substantial part of the memorial. He requested the proprietor of the store to permit him to dash off a letter to his folks at home. Seizing a propitious moment, Harkins spotted his checkbook, noted the exact balance, tore out a sheaf of checks and disappeared.

"Reproducing the proprietor's signature, Harkins drew up a sizeable check. On the reverse side he inscribed his alias as the payee and then added after 'O. K.' the facsimile of the depositor's signature. This acted as an identification indorsement, so when he presented the check at the bank it was readily cashed.

The Weak Spot

"The weak spot in Harkins' scheme is the identification indorsement. If the teller, before cashing any check bearing this alleged indorsement, telephoned to the depositor and checked up on its issuance, the scheme would have short shrift."

Banks throughout the country have been put on guard against Harkins and his plan and it is believed he cannot operate long without again falling into the net. The scheme that was pronounced unbeatable was devised by a forger known as F. Mayer and centered around the certified check fraud, Mr. Lewis says, continuing:

"F. Mayer would open accounts with four or five banks in a sizeable city. The largest account ran around $5,000. By kiting checks back and forth between the several banks, he would establish his identity with the tellers and become known as a man accustomed to deal in large figures.

"After conducting these preliminaries for a few weeks, Mayer would go to the bank where he had his largest account and ask that a certified check be issued to him for substantially all of the money remaining to his credit. From the genuine check, he would make four or five duplicates.

"In turn, Mayer would visit the other banks, where he had established small accounts. Inasmuch as he had cashed checks for some time, Mayer generally had little trouble in getting the banks to honor the certified checks. If a teller took the precaution of calling the issuing bank on the telephone to inquire if it had made out such a certified check, he would gain confirmation.

The Forger Caught

"But even the 'perfect' forgery scheme cannot be worked with impunity. Mayer succeeded in defrauding Kansas City banks out of $27,000 and made his escape. A few months later he was walking down the streets of Los Angeles when a teller who had honored one of the bogus checks in the middle western city recognized him. Mayer took to his heels with the former teller in hot pursuit, and the criminal lost."

The losses sustained through forgeries by banks may be mainly attributed to the failure of the tellers to observe the rules against cashing checks for strangers or allowing depositors to draw on uncollected items.

"A relentless, sustained hunt is conducted to apprehend the forgers. The new twists, the variations in the methods, the latest ruses used are followed by the detectives. The modes of operation are broadcasted throughout the country," the article declares. "The American Bankers Association alone, through its Protective Division, spends more than $100,000 a year to check depredations against banks."

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Knocking Down the Fences

I am tempted to repeat another incident, because it happened in a parsonage, a Methodist parsonage in my own state. The mistress of the manse told me that the one thing her husband was then fighting, was the Roman Catholic Church; because he knew and everybody knew, that the Pope was building a palace in Washington, that he would leave Rome and rule America from the District of Columbia. She was greatly puzzled when I told her that President Coolidge was having a palace built in Peking, and that the future White house would be in China.

When her husband came in, and caught the drift of the conversation, he informed me that the Chicago Tribune was edited by two men who were sent by the Pope to Chicago, to "run that paper." I am a reader of the Chicago Tribune, and I find it as religious as a Sears-Roebuck catalogue, and on the whole, as pro-Catholic as the Dearborn Indedendent is pro-Jewish.

These fulminations which rise from angered hearts are worse than useless. One cannot build a kingdom of truth which is the Kingdom of God, with lies, or even with gross exaggerations.

The greatest difficulty in making mankind think straight in the sphere of human relations. I find, lies in the fact that people mistake their prejudices for vital convictions, and they prefer to have their appendix cut out to having their prejudices removed. Peoples' protective instinct is great, and they think that if they lose their prejudices they have slipped from the rock of their salvation.

The prime duty of every Christian man today is, is to endeavor to get rid of his prejudices where they interfere with the right functioning of the laws which bind people together; so that even if they differ one from another in the profoundest matters, they may yet be good neighbors.

ARE WE ENTERING the DARK AGES?

If I am not mistaken, we in America are entering into a darker middle age than those which left behind them so much unpenetrated gloom, and nothing will save us from confusion, from bitter and lasting enmities, if not civil wars, but the virtue of clear thinking, the abstinence from the vice of judging by our prejudices and acting upon them, rather than upon the facts where they are obtainable.

To know both sides of a case and be too lenient, is not nearly so bad as to know only one side of the case and be unjust; to realize that all of truth is not the monopoly of any church or group and not be dogmatic, is not so bad as to believe that one knows it all and then be intolerant. One can have deep convictions, yet be open to more, and more, and more light.

This is an age of scientific achievement and of a dearth of prophesying; a splendid age for the body a hard one for the soul. I cannot believe that God is not eager to lead mankind into clearer and clearer knowledge of His Will, and to give it greater control of those moral forces which we so greatly need in this mechanical and materialistic age.

If the pulpit is sterile and the fountains of inspiration are dried up, is it not at least in part due to the fact that we are moved in our thinking by accumulated prejudices which reach back into the unreasoning days of our ancestors? We are not willing enough, or courageous enough to cut loose from these impediments and learn how to think boldly, no matter if the truth we discover is not the truth we want to know; no matter if it turns profit into loss, or if it reveals the fact that our own institutions and ideals are still incomplete and not necessarily the best.

Yet I am very sure that straight thinking alone will not save the world from the doom toward which it seems to be traveling. Logic alone will not save us; there must be deep feeling, our emotions need to be educated, and thus far no college curriculum deals with these problems adequately, and but few pulpits guide us toward their purification.

Three things make up the sum of true religion: "To do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with our God," which is clear thinking, deep feeling, and wise acting. And the hardest of these, is clear thinking.

(The end)

The Avocado

Avocadoes are a wonderful fruit which grows and ripens in south Florida. "Somebody is stealing my avocadoes," complained a Mr. Scull at breakfast one morning. "One is missing everyday. I certainly must catch the thief, for avocadoes are selling at 75 cents a pound."

The next morning Mr. Scull went to his orchard early, and there and then he caught the culprit in the act. It was a puppy that had recently come into his possession. An avocado seems a queer fruit for a dog to steal, but both cats and dogs are very fond of this rich, buttery fruit.

Many of the large avocadoes grow rather low on the tree, and when they are ripe they weigh the limbs down until the fruit rests on the ground, making it an easy matter for a dog to get them.

One avocado makes a satisfying meal. A little salt or lemon or lime juice is all that is needed to make them more palatable. The pulp may be removed from the thick rind and spread on bread or eaten with a fork.

The growing of avocadoes is said not to have yet been established in California on a commercial basis, but fine ones are produced in south Florida. The fruit originated in Mexico and Guatemala—the Mexican variety being thin skinned, while the Guatemalan has a thick and leathery skin. The leaves of the Mexican have the odor of anise.

The tree itself is beautiful, with leaves somewhat resembling the magnolia's, although they are not so glossy, nor so smooth.

Seedling trees have grown from 60 to 70 feet high, with a 50 foot spread. The bedded trees bear in from two to eight years. according to variety. With a little planning different varieties may be planted, so that the orchard will supply fruit throughout the year. The blossoms are small and inconspicuous, Although all varieties flower at about the same time, some of the fruit matures in six months; some not for a year.

The fruit is allowed to ripen on the tree, but it should be kept a few days after picking before eaten The size varies from a few ounces to three pounds. The single seed is as large as a plum and often sells for five cents.

The trees will stand as much frost as citrus trees, which, of course, is not a great deal, and they do not seem to require highly specialized soil. Prof. Ira J. Condit of the college of agriculture, the University of California, says that about 300 marketable fruit may be expected from a 15 year old tree in a year.

In order to solve the problems involved in producing avocadoes in great numbers and to bring the desirability of the fruit before the public the "Avocado" of California has been formed, and with its backing the avocado will probably become a common fruit of commerce before long.

Canners Growers To Cooperate In Tests

Fruit and vegetable growers on the one hand, and state canners on the other, will join forces to aid in formulating a program of experimental work for the horticultural forces at the M. A. C., according to announcement made here this week by Prof. V. R. Gardener, head of the M. A. C. horticultural department.

A joint committee of growers and canners will meet at East Lansing during the coming Farmers Week, the first week in February, to work out the details of the recommendations, it is understood. These recommendations will later be taken up by the college and incorporated into its experimental program.

The movement is expected to serve two ends, bringing the canners and growers of the state into closer relationships and at the same time furnishing M. A. C. with "straight dope" from the field as to just what problems are of vital importance to the fruit and vegetable interests of Michigan.

The college but recently completed successful tests to develop a "Michigan" variety of canning tomatoes which will better meet the needs of both growers and canners. Similar work of adaptation along other lines will be attempted on a larger scale in the future, the recommendations which will be drawn up by the joint committee serving as a basis for the planning of this work.

Farmers Own School To Open January 5.

A half dozen special agricultural short courses, planned especially for the farmer, will start at M. A. C. on Monday, January 5.

Open to every one in the state over 16 years of age, and offering opportunity for intensive study in special lines of practical agricultural work, these courses are expected to draw a large enrollment from among the young men in the state who are already on the farms or who plan to get into agricultural fields. The "short courses" are planned to meet the needs of those who cannot or who do not care to take the four year agricultural courses at the college. They are condensed to the limit, as much practical work as time will permit being crowded into the short terms offered. Demand for men to fill positions where special agricultural training is required (official cow testers, for intance) is met very largely by graduates of the winter farm courses.

The courses starting on January 5 are as follows: general agriculture, eight weeks; dairy production, ten weeks; dairy manufactures, eight weeks; horticulture, eight weeks; poultry, four weeks; farm engineering, eight weeks.

The Ford Motor Car Company has purchased the Bell lease on the Red Bird lead mine, near Makay, Idaho. Several carloads of equipment have been taken to the mine which the Ford company has already begun to operate, Roads to Mackay, the shipping point will be kept open during the winter by snow plows using Ford equipment.

The Coldwater Gas Light and Fuel Company, Grand Haven Gas Company, Hillsdale Light and Fuel Company, and Monroe Gas Light and Fuel Company have consolidated into one corporation, known as Central States Utilities Company, with main offices in Detroit. It is capitalized for $250,000 preferred stock and $75,000 non par shares.

RECORD OF BANK FAILURES GROWS

Suspensions Since January, 1924, Exceed Number in Three Years of Wilson Administration.

BUSINESS SUFFERS EQUALLY

Total of 13,290 Commercial Bankruptcies Reported Up to Sept. 1, Against 25,314 in Period from 1918 to 1920.

Washington, D. C.—Bank failures in the first six months of 1924 were nearly three times as numerous as the bank failures during the entire last three years of the second Wilson administration, it is revealed by statistics recently compiled by the R. G. Dun Mercantile Agency. The liabilities involved in the bank failures between January 1 and August 31, this year, were more than eight times greater than those incident to all the failures during the thirty-six months of 1918-20, both inclusive.

The story of commercial failures in the first eight months of the present year (January to August, inclusive) is even more dismal. The total of these failures in these eight months was 13,920 and the liabilities $396,427,178. The number of these failures in three fourths of a year was more than half as great as the number reported in the three years from 1918 to 1920—during the second Wilson administration. The liabilities in the same eight months were within two-fifths as much as those for the three years of the Wilson administration cited.

The figures from the records of R. G. Dun's agency show the following with regard to bank failures:

Condition Worse In West

That panicky conditions have been particularly bad in the farm and stock raising States of the West, for which the Republican leaders promised a panacea for all ills in the emergency tariff act, subsequently replaced by the Fordney-McCumber law, one or the other of which has been in effect since the spring of 1921, is indicated by Treasury figures, published in the press in July, 1924, showing that of the bank failures recorded, 342 were in the States west of the Mississippi River. They included 267 State and 75 national banks—the latter number being greater than the total of all national banks failing throughout the entire country in the seven years of the Wilson administrations from 1914 to 1920, inclusive.

This appalling record of distress in the Western States shows a total of 66 failures in South Dakota alone during the first six months of 1924; 48 in North Dakota; 40 in Montana. Of all the States west of the Mississippi, only Nevada was not in the casualty list. And as this is written, reports are still coming in, one press dispatch relating the closing of six banks in Wyoming within two days.

Business men who were promised flush times with a Republican victory in 1920 have had an awakening equally sad, for bad as is the record of bank failures, it is no more disastrous than that of commercial failures.

FARMERS SUFFER ANNUAL NET LOSS

New York.—Farmers of the United States pay about $301,000,000 more in tariff each year than they get back from the "protection" given to agricultural products by the present Fordney-McCumber law, according to economists of the Farm Bureau Federation. As there are about 30,000,000 people engaged in agriculture—counting men, women and children—the loss they suffer through the tariff equals about $10 per capita a year.

As a fitting expression to its Commander-in-Chief, over ten thousand Odd Fellows and Rebekahs from Michigan and Ontario gathered in the City of Detroit, Oct. 4. Among the events was a complimentary banquet at the Hotel Statler at which more than five hundred sat down to a banquet to its honored fellow member. A monster parade was held in the evening, followed by a mass meeting at which Grand Master, John A. Wilde; Grand Patriarch, W. H. Bennetts; Governor Alex Groesbeck and others made addresses of welcome, which were responded to by Grand Sire Thompson in a very eloquent and masterly manner. At the session of the Grand Lodge held at Alpena, Oct. 20 to 24, the new Grand Sire was received in a manner befitting the occasion of honoring one whose authority extends to the furthermost parts of the earth. The reception was in every way expressive of the keen appreciation Michigan Odd Fellowship felt.

Mr. Thompson is the self-made type of man. He was born on a farm at Stockbridge, Ingham County, Michigan, on July 26, 1872. He was educated in the public schools and colleges of Michigan, and was actively engaged in educational work for six years. He then purchased The Williamston Enterprise at Williamston, Michigan, and later The American Odd Fellow, a fraternal magazine of national reputation, and has continued as the editor and publisher until the present time, his son, Theodore A. Thompson, being in active charge of the plant. During that time he became and is now actively affiliated with several financial and insurance companies, as well as other business interests. He has always taken an active part in public matters, and as a public speaker is known all over the state where his friends are legion. In politics he is a republican, and has served on the state central committee for a number of years. He has served

In the warden's office she found George and the district attorney.

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Josselyn," Ryan said. Ellen, smiling faintly, tried to read his rosy, complacent face. "This is a most extraordinary turn of events," he said. "This little fellow had the secret up his sleeve all the time, eh?"

Ellen felt almost faint with the revulsion this change in his manner gave her. Ryan had always been sharp, suspicious, menacing, before. She wanted to ask: "You believe it, then?" but quick intuition told her that that must wait. So she asked instead:

"Tommy talked, did he? He answered your questions?"

"He is an extremely intelligent child," Ryan remarked. "Gave his testimony like a little man. Nothing that we could say could shake him. We put him, through a pretty sharp half-hour. He stuck to it. I—I won't deny that I think this changes the entire aspect of affairs, Mrs. Josselyn. I've already advised the sheriff to delay the—the transfer of Mr. Josselyn."

"There may be a new trial?" Ellen asked, trembling. For answer Daniel Ryan smiled at her, and there was something so kindly, so reassuring, in that red face, when it smiled, that she felt a melting, a breaking up of coldness and hate, in her heart. Hate changed suddenly to love, and fear changed to confidence. Ellen experienced the most poignant of all human emotions.

"We may not even have it go to trial," George supplied.

"May not?" she echoed, choking.

"No," Ryan confirmed it. "There is no question for a jury. I don't know of a parallel case," he said thoughtfully. "But I should suppose that it would only be necessary to put this evidence before the court, with suitable testimony to its genuineness, to have the whole case dismissed!" He turned to the warden. "May we see Mr. Josselyn?" he asked, with the quiet manner of a man making a request sure to be granted.

Gibbs, followed by the inevitable guard, came in, and they turned to him. His silver crest was, as always, as smooth as satin, but he looked ill-groomed and haggard; worst of all, he looked beaten. There were lead-colored circles about his dark, anxious eyes, and his manner had uncertain nervous apprehensiveness that was unlike its old imperial certainty.

"Mr. Josselyn," Ryan said, "has your wife informed you that we have found some most important testimony bearing upon your case?"

"You regard it so, Mr. Ryan?" Gibbs said lifelessly.

"I regard it as more than important. I regard it as so vital that I feel free to congratulate you upon it, Mr. Josselyn, upon a miraculous escape from an error of the law. And I hope to God," Ryan added, "that we will soon find means to get you out of here!"

"I thank you," Gibbs answered briefly. But Ellen saw his lip tremble.

"Gibbs—my dear, dear boy!" George stammered, taking both his hands.

Ellen had a quick sensation of faintness and nausea. She looked bravely at George, and smiled waveringly.

"We—we mustn't be too sure—" she stammered. A moment later the harsh, whitewashed walls and the rodded doors, the warden's desk, and the tall, bare windows, vanished. She saw them all blur together, like a picture in a bubble, and, like the bubble, suddenly become flecked with widening black spots. Then everything was black.

CHAPTER XVII

On a quiet September morning, about a year and a half later, a young man, his pretty wife and their very small baby got out of the long train of dusty pullman coaches at the dry, sleepy little California town of Los Antonios.

After a smiling survey of the scene, during which they were apparently entirely unnoticed, the man crossed the street to the bank, and asked a question of the teller.

"Sure you can; you can phone from here," said that delicate, blonde, mustached official pleasantly. "Phone Murphy's garage, and they'll take you up there. The Josselyns who have the old Perry place, isn't it? Sure, it's about six miles out of town, up in the hills." He meditated a second, and then, with a burst of interest, he added. "Say, Mrs. Josselyn was in here about a minute ago! Know her car? It must be right outside here."

And he obligingly stepped to the door with the newcomer, and looked up and down the street.

"That's the car," he said, indicating one that had been left empty before the post office door. "If you get in there and wait for Mrs. Josselyn she'll be right out of somewhere."

Joe Latimer went across the street again, and took the baby from its mother's arms.

"That's Ellen's car, there!" he said, smiling nervously. Lizzie did not speak. Her cheeks were burning with excitement. "I can't believe we're here!" Joe echoed her thought. "In a few minutes we'll see her!"

"Oh, don't!" Lizzie said, faintly. With the baby on one arm, and the big suitcase in his free hand, Joe went to the waiting motor, and Lizzie, carrying the little suitcase, followed. He put his wife and baby in the tonneau, but was too nervous himself to join them there, and walked up and down the sidewalk instead, turning his head whenever a screen-door banged, to look for Ellen.

Suddenly they saw her, in a doorway a hundred feet away, talking to some other marketing woman. The same Ellen, with her blue honest eyes and her sensitive, sweet mouth. There was some new quality in her face and manner: what was it?—responsibility, gravity, tenderness, Joe could not tell.

He walked up to her, and she raised surprised eyes.

"Mornin', Mis' Josselyn!"

The puzzled look in her eyes changed swiftly, and she put her hands out and caught at him vaguely, as if to hold a dream.

"Joe Latimer! Joe!" She groped for her handkerchief, laughing as she wiped her eyes; tears of joy stood in his own. "But Joe dear, what brings you here! I simply can't believe it! I can't believe my eyes!" she said.

"Lizzie brought me!" Joe grinned. Ellen dropped his hand to go swiftly to the motorcar.

"Lizzie!" she echoed radiantly. Her eyes fell upon the bundle in Lizzie's arms, across which Lizzie must lean to return her kiss. "But—but—what!" Ellen stammered. "You—you two haven't got a baby?"

Joe thought that one moment was worth all the fatigue of the long trip.

"Haven't we?" he said, as Ellen, standing on the curb with the precious bundle in her arms, opened the tissues that screened the tiny face, and bent her own cheek against the warm, unresponsive little cheek.

"Well, I have never had such a delicious surprise in my life!" Ellen exclaimed. "You darling!" she crooned to the baby. 'What did you name him, Joe?"

"We thought a good name for him would be Ellen," grinned Joe. It was good to hear her old laugh again, and see the pleasure in her eyes as she glanced from face to face.

"Named for me? My own tiny niece! Ah, Joe, you make me proud!" She gave the baby back to Lizzie, and stood for a moment, resting her hands on the car door, and still trying to regain her breath after the surprise. "Well, now, I'll take you home! I may have something else to do while I'm in town, but it has gone completely out of my head, if I have! I can't wait to get home, to show Gibbs what I've brought with me!"

Talking of little, inconsequent things, as those who love each other, and who meet after years, always must do at first, they drove through the dusty street, and past flat fields where great oaks threw blots of shade on the shining brown grass, and so climbed a curving road into the hills.

Here and there on the slopes a brown bungalow clung, half-hidden in trees. Ellen pointed at a sloping roof, halfway between the ridge and the shore.

"That's the house," she told them. "It belonged to a Mr. Perry, who knew Gibbs, you know, and he loaned it to us at first. But we loved it so we couldn't think of moving away, and a year ago Gibbs bought it."

"It's a wonderful life to me," Ellen admitted thoughtfully. And as she made no motion to start the car, but sat twisted about in her seat, looking down vaguely at the sea, Joe wondered again what that new look in her eyes meant. "We can't get enough of it," she added. "It's all so deliciously simple, and so free: like being children again. It's taken us back to our summers in Brittany. George and Harriet were here in—in July, I think it was. Gibbs' friends are always going and coming through San Francisco, and they come down!"

"Lord, what air!" Joe said, with a deep breath. The sweet odor of the pines was drifting through the still warmth.

"Oh, it's marvelous, Joe. December is apt to have days like this, and February is a great month for picnics!" Ellen said, eagerly. "What I wanted to say to you," she added, a little uncertainly, "was—I thought I would just tell you—"

They were appalled to hear a sudden thickening in her voice, and to see that her utmost effort could not keep her eyes from watering.

"You know that Gibbs hasn't been well, don't you?" she asked, hastily.

"You wrote that he wasn't well, some time ago—" Joe began hesitatingly.

"You'll see—a change," Ellen added. "And of course you mustn't let him see that you see it." She lost control of her voice again.

"I should think this climate would build him up again," Lizzie ventured, a little timidly. Joe looked at her gratefully, and Ellen quickly grasped the thread of comfort.

"Oh, Lizzie, it will—they all say it will!" she said, eagerly, wiping her eyes. But immediately they brimmed again, and the dark head and the crushed white hat went down on the back of the seat; she burst into tears. "Oh, Joe—Joe—Joe! He's not going to get well!" she sobbed.

"Ellen!" Joe said, aghast.

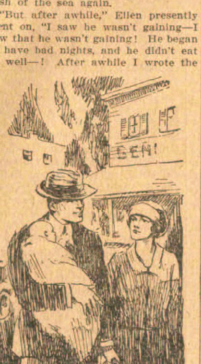
"Oh, I know it," Ellen said presently, lifting her head, and resolutely regaining her self-control. "I know it! I am sure he does, too. I'm sorry to break down this way, but I don't often have a chance," she added penitently, with a watery smile. "I never let him see that—that it's killing me, too."

"But, Ellen, what is it?" Lizzie asked, fearfully.

"Well, he was sick, after that terrible two months, you know," Ellen said, reflectively. "He looked—don't you remember how he looked? And then one day Doctor Cutter said, just casually, "I'd go somewhere where it's hot and dry, Ellen. He's been under a terrible mental and physical strain and he's managed to get a heavy cold, and there's a little affection of the lung." Joe, how could I ever dream it was that! We came to Santa Barbara, and the Perrys wrote us about Los Antonios, and Gibbs did seem better; he ate well, and usually slept pretty well—"

Her voice dropped to utter silence, and they could hear the steady, soft rush of the sea again.

"But after awhile," Ellen presently went on, "I saw he wasn't gaining—I saw that he wasn't gaining! He began to have bad nights, and he didn't eat so well—! After awhile I wrote the Santa Barbara doctor, and he wrote back that just before we left Gibbs had been in to see him, and that he thought he could not improve upon his instructions then: to sleep in the open air, and live simply, and not catch cold. So Gibbs knows, but he never spoke of that call to me.



"I Can't Believe We're Here!" Joe Echoed Her Thought. "In a Few Minutes We'll See Her!"

"Lately," she finished, "he has been keeping to his couch a good deal; he doesn't join us in gardening or picnics, as he did last year. Well! I only wanted to warn you. Perhaps it is my own fancy, partly. And, Joe—what a year we have had! A whole year of paradise, nothing but each other, and Tom, music, and books and the garden, and the ocean! It has blotted out all the bitterness—wiped out the past. The Perrys called the house 'Arcady,' and we've kept the name—at first for convenience with the tradespeople, but now because we know it fits!"

She started the car down the grade, presently turning in at an opening in a stone wall that was so smothered in vines, so closely surrounded with the color scheme of greens and browns about it as to be almost invisible.

"Oh, pretty!" Lizzie said, involuntarily.

"This is the house," Ellen smiled. "Welcome, you darlings! Give me that angel, Lizzie, I want to show her to Gibbs!"

She led them through the wide side hall, where great logs waited in a stone fireplace, and bowls of flowers glowed in a tempered light.

A glass double door gave upon the great front veranda, and here Ellen ran with the baby.

"I want you to meet Ellen Latimer, Gibbs—!"

It was well that they had been warned of what change they might find in him, for Lizzie caught a quick breath as she saw him, and it required all Joe's presence of mind to go forward and greet him naturally.

He was still handsome—Gibbs would always be that. But he was painfully thin, and seemed strangely aged. His dark, splendid eyes shone in a thin face whose temples blazed sometimes with an uneasy color. The ring he always wore was loose on the fine long hand. His hair was an even silvery white.

His manner was changed, too. There was a gravity, a sweetness and a certain heroic serenity about him that seemed to lift them all into the plane of simple endurance and renunciation. Lizzie and Joe knew, as they settled laughing into porch chairs to talk to him, that Ellen's worst fears were none too grave.

Like Gibbs himself, they must accept the thing as a finality. There was no dispute. They found themselves suddenly confident and gay, as human beings, forced to accept their own helplessness, usually become. This was in the nature of a catastrophe; it was almost as if they had come to California to find that Gibbs was dead.

The exquisite hours went on. Below the dark, cool space of the porch the Pacific spread in glittering band. The little crescent of white sand that was their own beach was bared by a lazily receding tide. The garden odors and the resinous smell of the pines were permeated by the bracing salt breath of the sea.

When Pong, the house-boy, in his plum color and pale green, came noiselessly to the porch to announce luncheon, Tommy burst in, sturdy brown Tommy, frantic with excitement at seeing his adored uncle and aunt again. He was with difficulty persuaded to rush off and transfer some of the dirt on his hands to a towel, and returned with the center lock of his bushy hair dampened and combed amid a tousled mass that had not been touched.

Yet even in Tommy Joe saw the change that a great shadow brings to even the children of a household. He was all tenderness and devotion with his father, and he had a most unchildish fashion of entering into his mother's mood. When the grass under the oaks was barred with straight lines of shadow from the sinking sun, and a lingering twilight fell flat and soft over the ocean, Tommy, like the others fell silent, his dark head resting against his father's arm, a big book opened on his knees. And when Ellen presently called him, there was none of the usual childish protest. He went in, and they heard Ellen's fingers on the piano, and then the tones of his violin.

"He plays wonderfully!" Lizzie said, when the simple air died away.

"He plays well for such a child," Gibbs conceded. "And he loves it, which is half the battle. I hope Ellen will make a musician of him!"

Lizzie winced away from the quiet intimation that Ellen alone must control Tommy's destiny.

Gibbs was silent again; the others knew that he saw the Ellen of the years to come with the growing boy beside her.

CHAPTER XVIII

Two or three days later Gibbs proposed a beach luncheon. Ellen, brightly indifferent when he first suggested it, was fired with sudden enthusiasm and delight when it transpired that he himself planned to go, too.

"Oh, he is better!" she said over and over again, as she buttered bread and trimmed oiled paper.

They set off in a straggling line; Tommy leaping ahead with his dog, and circling them as senselessly; Gibbs and Joe following, the latter with his tiny daughter held safely in his arms.

"I have never seen a man as infatuated with a tiny scrap of humanity as Joe is with the baby!" Ellen smiled. "Does it make you jealous, Lizzie?"

"Oh, Ellen, no!" Lizzie said, horrified. "I didn't realize—I don't think he did—what the baby was going to mean!" she added presently. "The night she was born—I'll never forget his face! I had been ill, you know, all the time, and I had thought sometimes that I mightn't live, and that that was the way it was all to end! And then came that fearful pain and—bewilderment—"

"I know!" Ellen nodded.

"And when I suddenly came out of it all, and found there was nothing wrong, but a sweet little girl asleep in a crib, why, it all seemed to clear itself!" Lizzie explained. "I said to myself, Ellen, that the past was gone. I was Joe's wife, and Ellen's mother, and the happiest woman in the world! If God forgives us, sometimes I think it's a sin not to forgive ourselves. So if ever I find myself blue, I just think that."

"And the consequence is, that you don't find yourself blue!" Ellen said gayly.

'Oh, I'm too happy! Joe—" Lizzie said. She gave Ellen a bride's half-shamed, half-mischievous smile— "Joe is an angel!" announced Lizzie.

Colony of New Haven Had First Blue Laws

In 1715 it was ordered by the general court that a suitable man be appointed to construct a code of laws for the New Haven colony. The appointment fell to Governor Eaton and he was instructed by the general court to study the laws of Massachusetts colony, and also the "Discourse on Civil Government in a New Plantation," by Reverend Mister Gotton, to aid him in his work.

Governor Eaton promptly issued a code of laws, many of which were from the Massachusetts code. Duly presented to the elders of correct jurisdiction, the fruit of the governor's toil was by them approved and passed, says the Detroit News. The general court, moreover, ordered 500 copies to be printed for the New Haven colonists.

At this period of history New Haven was an entirely different and separate colony from Connecticut, the latter being made up of the towns of Hartford, Windsor and Wethersfield and wild adjacent territory.

The term "blue laws," therefore, undoubtedly came from the fact that the first printed laws of either colony, being those of Governor Eaton, were enveloped in blue paper. So the code of Governor Eaton comprised the real and original blue laws and since these were enacted for New Haven colony it is further established that they should be called the "blue laws of New Haven colony" and not of Connecticut. The laws of other colonies were also used in constructing the code and many of them are at the present time upon the statute books of Connecticut. Many of the better laws of that state today are founded on them.

Lion of Lucerne

The Lion of Lucerne is a famous piece of sculpture by Albert Thorwaldsen, commemorating the heroism and devotion of nearly eight hundred Swiss guards, who died to save Louis XVI. in the attack on the Tuileries, August 10, 1792. The colossal figure of the crouching lion, transfixed and dying, but still faithfully defending the shield of France, is carved in a recess in the face of an upright, vine-draped rock in a little park at Lucerne, Switzerland. A commemorative inscription, with the names of the officers killed, is cut in the rock.

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Feel Stiff and Achy After Every Cold?

Do You Have Constant Backache? Feel Old and Lame and Suffer Sharp, Rheumatic Pains? Then Look to Your Kidneys!

DOES every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you worn-out and utterly miserable? Do you feel old and lame, stiff and rheumatic? Does your back ache with a dull, unceasing throb, until it seems you just can't stand it any longer?

Then look to your kidneys! Grip, colds and chills are mighty hard on the kidneys. They fill the blood with poisons and impurities that the kidneys must filter off. The kidneys weaken under this rush of new work; become congested and inflamed.

It's little wonder, then, that every cold leaves you with torturing backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities.

Don't delay! Get a box of Doan's Pills. Give your weakened kidneys the help they need. Assist them, also, by drinking pure water freely, eating lightly and getting plenty of fresh air and rest. Doan's Pills have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good Folks:

MRS. P. MADSON, Spruce St., Grayling, Mich., says: "I had a lameness in the small of my back and bearing-down pains across my kidneys, which made my housework burdensome. All this misery taxed my strength and left me weak and worn out. I was nervous and my kidneys acted too often. After using several boxes of Doan's Pills I was rid of the attack."

H. E. PARKER, prop. notion store, Spruce St., residence Park St., Grayling, Mich., says: "A dull ache through the small of my back was the first sign of kidney trouble in my case. As time passed, my back became lame and sore and I felt tired and worn out. My kidneys were weak and I had to get up two and three times during the night to pass the secretions. After using two boxes of Doan's Pills I was rid of the trouble."

New Idea in Stenciling

The latest development in the art of stenciling is to use a piece of old lace in place of the usual stencil cut from stencil board. The lace gives exceptionally delicate results when properly used, especially for the wall panels that are now so popular.

The lace is prepared by giving it a coat of shellac to stiffen it, says Popular Science Monthly. It is fastened firmly against the wall and the color is applied with a stiff stencil brush in the usual way, except that great care must be taken to prevent the design from becoming blurred. When dry, the panels are framed with panel molding.

They arrived and were very much interested in the "tuning up" process, asking each other numerous questions about this, that and the other thing. When everything seemed ready, the director entered and mounted his stand.

"Who's that?" Slim asked Blackie.

Death of William W. Mercer

William W. Mercer of Somerset township died at his home sometime between Saturday night and Sunday morning, as he was found lifeless in the morning. He was 71 years, 9 months and 18 days of age and had been a resident of the farm where he died 47 years.

He was a highly respected citizen who had served his township as supervisor for over 20 years. He is survived by two brothers, John and Samuel Mercer and two sisters, Mrs. Will Bilby and Mrs. Elizabeth Robins, one son, Leon Mercer, besides more distant relatives.

Funeral services were largely attended and held at Somerset Centre church on Wednesday at 1:00 p. m., and burial was in the local cemetery there.

On the Board of Supervisors at Hillsdale he will be severely missed as he was one of the oldest members.

Burgderfer Pleases

Diligent inquiry fails to locate anybody who wasn't just "tickled to death" over the impersonating stunts of Clarence L. Burgderfer for 25 years a past master at the art, who appeared at the Congregational church Tuesday evening His repertoire is to say the least, amusing, and his characterizing of the old father who wanted his children to arise in the morning, was true to nature, and the entire program was a running fire of funny original jokes.

He kept his audience in a convulsed state of merriment and we must admit that the whole performance was devoid of the faintest touch of vulgarity—in fact Mr Burgderfer has, we believe, the cleanest repertoire of any comedian we have heard. The Parent-Teachers' Association should be congratulated upon getting him here and we hope for more of the same. Patronage was good considering the severe weather and we might say Mr. Burgderfer needs no introduction to our people since he has appeared here previously as reader of the old Hillsdale College quartet.

What Does the New Year Bring?

We can say frankly it brings us relief in the way of less to do and less to look after in our line of work, since the past four weeks has been a time of hurry and flutter and anxiety to get work out for folks in time and also to perform the little thousand and one tasks that go with the newspaper business. Old 1924 with his hoary hair and tangled whiskers has gone his way to the boneyard alongwith petty jealousies, bickerings, neigborhood quarrels and the like, and in his place has come the blithsome cherub, 1925, rosy and ready to enter the door and begin carving a new future.

Even though we cannot recall a single great catastrophe brought by old 1924, yet we gladly bid him farewell, because there is a fond expectation of something better, something worth while—and a new lease of business life. Statisticians are optimistic concerning the outlook for big business the coming year, in fact they are guaranteeing it.

What have we to show for the labors of the past year? Some perhaps have not much—more's the pity. Others have profited from the labors of someone else, and are many hundreds of dollars better off than a year ago, financially, but are starving socially. No one has any fondness for a leech: then there are men and women who have by their own efforts gained a few steps on the financial ladder, they are scrupulous—they are thrifty, and to this latter class we must ascribe most of the glory, the honor and the credit of good citizenship.

Candidly, the man who keeps digging into hard work regardless of what comes his way and keeps his eye on the indicator, is the best off when the end of the year comes and he balances the ledger. It makes us wroth to see so many of the younger people whose lives are in the prime, recklessly spending their incomes as they get them. At their time in life the whole program should be work—work—work, and save—save—save. Who cares if the criticisers do talk! The world is full of foolish snobs who think the young person should cut a wide swath and throw money at the birds. If you will watch these self same birds you will find their goal is mostly the junk pile and bankruptcy, and the quacks after a short but meteoric career suddenly find themselves old and their health is gone—age has stolen on them unawares, and they are a bundle of broken sticks, good for nothing—worth nothing, except to cumber the earth as driftwood. We welcome the New Year with joyous acclaim, and though it is sad to know we are one year older.

OPPOSES FEDERAL RAIL OWNERSHIP

Government Operation Would Mean Increased Taxation for General Public, Says Rail Head.

Opposition to Government ownership of the railroads, not because of the interests of the present owners but rather because of the burdens and disadvantages the change would impose upon the people as a whole, was expressed by C. H. Markham, president of the Illinois Central Railroad, in an address before the recent convention of the American Bankers Association.

"We have never favored Government ownership as a national policy," Mr. Markham said. "If the railroads are taken over by the Government, we must face the fact that the big step in reversing our old and settled policy will be taken. If there is no particular reason why the Government should not own and run the railroads, is there any reason why it should not take over also the banks, the stores, the factories, the farms, until all of us are Government employees and the ideal of the soviet is attained? The railroads are the first line of defense against those who would make this country a second Russia.

"The railroads have about 2,000,000 employees, approximately as many employees as there are in all the Government services — Federal, State, county and municipal—put together. If the railroads are taken over by the Government, there will be one Government employee out of every ten wage earners in the country, instead of one out of every twenty, as at present.

Doubling Taxation

"Then, too, there is the matter of taxation. The railroads, under private ownership, are among our heaviest taxpayers. Last year they paid taxes amounting to $3 for every man, woman and child in the country. In some counties, particularly in the Middle West, the railroads pay from 10 per cent to nearly 50 per cent of the taxes collected. Under Government ownership, the railroads would be no more subject to taxation than the post offices now are. In some way the Government would have to make up the difference of $3 a head for every person in the country. In many counties the taxes on the remaining property would have to be nearly doubled. The result would be an unbearable burden that might force many of our local governments to stop payments on their bonds and go into bankruptcy. The tax problem would be a great deal more vexatious than it is today.

"Then, too, the acquisition of the railroads would add more than twenty billion dollars to our national debt. If Government railroads in this country were no more successful than they are elsewhere today in the world, the interest on that twenty billions of purchase price would be the cause for additional burdens on the taxpayers left to carry it. As the tax burden developed, it would not be surprising to see other industries welcoming Government ownership for themselves. They would gain immunity from taxation in turn, and their owners probably would be protected from loss. The Constitution prevents the confiscation of private property, and Government ownership can be accomplished only by paying a fair price for the properties taken over.

Senator Owen Charges Deflation of Farm Prices and Values Due to Republicans.

BIG INTERESTS GET TIP

Thousands of Agricultural Producers and Small Business Men Ruined Since 1920, and Depression Not Yet Halted.

Washington, D. C.—Frequent mention of the "deflation" of agricultural prices and values has been made by speakers and newspapers since the present presidential campaign began several weeks ago and is likely to be heard even more often before November 4. Senator Robert L. Owen's speech on this subject in the Senate is gaining wide circulation because of his charge—never denied by the Republican Senators who heard him in the Senate or by any other Republican—that certain big individuals and interests had a "tip" in advance that the "squeeze" was impending, while farmers and others were unaware of the plan for stopping credits and depressing values.

Senator Owen declared that the Republican Congress and then the Harding administration were responsible for the "deflation" which has ruined thousands of farmers and small business men since 1920. Senator Owen said in part:

"That Republican convention (1920) declared in favor of a policy of deflation. * * * In his (Candidate Harding's) acceptance speech he declared in favor of a policy of deflation. The time for action had come. * * * All of the arrangeemnts for bringing on the panic had been made. The Farm Loan banks were closed; the War Finance Corporation was closed, and the Republican Congress had fastened on the Federal Reserve banking system that cruel and criminal progressive interest rate amendment, under which the panic of 1920 and 1921 was brought about and under which a bank in Alabama was charged 87½ per cent. They never disclosed to the public their purpose to produce a panic until it was too late for the farmers, merchants and bankers of the South and West, and honest business men of the country generally, to take the steps necessary to protect their interests. * * *

Hillsdale county now has a woman Undersheriff and it stands the boys in hand to behave, since the broom and flatiron are hard weapons in the hands of one who knows how to use them. Dr. and Mrs. Midgely have been sworn in and as soon as New Years resolutions wear off there will be matters for the Sheriff and Sheriffess to attend to.

Economists are worrying their heads off to devise some scheme whereby girls can be kept on the farm, and it is claimed this is the most serious problem of the day. We wouldn't wonder if that was correct, but it does seem as though the bobbed hair craze was one of the "real chores" as the old negro Mammy remarked. It is not keeping the girl on the farm that matters so much as the trick of keeping them fairly well groomed and fit to associate with the young men as a moral uplift.

Methodist Church Prosperous

Since the pastorate of Rev. Hutton there is a marked improvement in the interest and attendance in all departments of the church. One of the most notable changes has been from the suggestion of Rev. Hutton for a weekly bulletin or church catalogue issued each week in the year and distributed to the Sunday morning audience. This is the plan on which city churches operate and it is a highly valued adjunct in building up our attendance. In the bulletin appear all affairs of the week

Brotherhood Meeting Sunday Evening

On Sunday evening at the Methodist church the county Brotherhood Chorus under direction of Frank Perkins of Hillsdale gave one of their popular concerts. Several of Hillsdale and Jonesville members were present and selections rendered were enthusiastically received. Rev. Hutton, Carl Anthony Rock of Jonesville and Mr. Aulsbro of Hillsdale gave talks on the conditions and needs of the retired ministers.

Congregational Church is Growing

Rev. Virgil Hunt informs us that he received 26 new members into his church Sunday morning last at the usual church hour. Baptismal services were held and 24 young people received the rite. Since his pastorate here Rev. Hunt has taught a popular class in the Sunday school and the fruits of his labor are in evidence as nearly the entire class are now in full church membership.

Ages of the candidates range from 13 to 20 years. The church has shown a new lease of life since the advent of the Hunts.

New York Central Stock For Sale

We received a letter on Thursday from "One Hundred Car Pat Crowley" president of the New York Central Lines, stating that the company had entered upon a new era January 7th and would become a co-operative concern offering and selling its stock to all employees at $110.00 per share, whereas the market price at this moment is $120.00 per share

Those not having the lucre to put down spot cash, can pay in instalments of from $5 to $15 per share, with interest at 4 per cent on deferred payments. No one can buy more than 20 shares and is entitled to only one share for every two hundred of his annual salary.

This looks good to us inasmuch as it will teach the workers to have nerve, but at the same time encourage "plunging" in stocks, which is not a healthy practice for an underpaid railroad man.

By this process section bosses and car wheel tunkers automatically be owners of the road and their own bosses. We shall shortly see station men and section hands wearing silk tiles and carrying gold headed canes, but the funniest stunt would be when the engineer would give himself a thirty-day lay-off for knocking the end off an empty.

Markos Expert Metaphysicians

On Wednesday night the Markos traveling magicians, under auspices of the Senior class of the High school mystified people at the opera house with their sleight of hand performances and universal satisfaction is expressed by all who witnessed the program. Marko while not performing any radically new stunts, performed a number of old ones in a remarkably clever way that brought encores. Chemistry. mechanical appliances and lightning like changes figured in the stunts. and next morning the "boys" went about with various theories as to what they saw and not any of them professed to tell just how the Markos did it. The human eye is by far the quickest organ on the body yet it fails to follow the movements of these jugglers in transposing and metamorphosing animals, articles and liquids. Of course we know nothing is supernatural and there is an explanation to every trick pulled off, yet sometimes we are startled by the grewsomeness of it. The Markos certainly set at naught Abe Lincoln's favorite axiom "you can fool all of the people part of the time, and part of the people all the time but you cant fool all the people all the time." Here is a concrete example of the perjury of Lincoln's statement. We certainly have to admit that at the opera house on Wednesday night "all the people were fooled mostly all the time" and there was no getting by. The Markos went to Horton and thence back to Jonesville.

Will be held in the opera house on January 17th in the evening. A real carnival is expected consisting of a program, a two reel picture, booths for selling candy and refreshments, games and in fact all that goes to make up a satisfactory entertainment for the benefit of the Parent Teachers Association. Considerable money has been spent in changing the old opera house into a more suitable gymnasium and community hall and to reimburse this outlay the carnival is staged. Come one! Come all! and remember it is putting your high school on a modern basis when you pay the price of admission to our carnival You want your village schools to have the best there is going and by means of a gymnasium and auditorium this can be done. What you GET here

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen; or by a test with your own cows

Valuable Catch

Sixty thousand dollars was realized from a single day's catch of fish just off the beach near Cape Charles, Va., when 12 refrigerator cars moved to the markets 1,500 barrels of gray trout that averaged the fishermen $40 a barrel. It was the biggest catch of the season and possibly in years of any of the seaside fishermen and came at a time when the season is about to close, which will serve to stimulate the fish industries along the coast of the two eastern shores of Virginia counties, which have had a comparatively poor season throughout the year.

Michigan Happenings

A hearing of the charge of Mayor Peter C. Jezewski, of Hamtramck, that he has been placed in an intolerable position by state interference in the administration of police affairs will be held at Lansing the evening of Wednesday, January 14, Governor Groesbeck has announced. Jezewski, whose removal had been asked on allegations that the laws were not being enforced, was virtually placed on probation with the understanding that William Berg, police commissioner, appointed upon the recommendation of the state, was to be given a free hand to clean up the town.

Incomplete figures on deer license sale in the state as received by Dr. John N. Lowe, of the Northern State Normal school, indicate that licenses were issued to approximately 41,000 hunters this year as compared with 35,000 in 1923. John Baird, state conservation commissioner, estimates that about 20,000 deer were killed this year. The 1924 slaughter was considerably greater than in 1923, Baird says, pointing out that 1923 was an "off year" for deer hunting, with warm weather prevailing and no snow in the woods throughout the season.

Tax figures for 1924 incomes showing several important changes in exemptions and big cuts in the rate on small incomes, have been given out by Fred L. Woodworth, collector of internal revenue. This year all married persons can claim exemption of $2,500 and single persons $1,000. The tax last year was 4 per cent on the first $4,000 and 6 per cent on incomes exceeding $4,000. This year only 2 per cent will be levied on the first $4,000, 4 per cent on the second $4,000, and 6 per cent on all incomes exceeding $8,000.

Eugene Willette, 32, of Gladstone, is dead as the result of plunging off the northwestern ore dock at Escanaba to the ice 100 feet below. He is the fourth man to be killed in connection with the work of remodeling the dock. Willette was engaged in hooking a cable to a large timber which was to have been lowered to the bottom of the dock when the timber slid off the side of the icy dock, carrying him with it.

Hugh Dillon, of Dowagiac, Mich., who drove his automobile into a Michigan Central train at Marshall last spring and killed William Shaw, a passenger in the auto, was sentenced to from six months to five years at the Michigan Reformatory at Ionia by Circuit Judge Walter H. North. A jury convicted Dillon of negligent homicide.

James H. Wade, for 25 years secretary of the University of Michigan, is dead from a stroke of paralysis. Mr. Wade was born in Onondaga County, New York, and came to Jonesville, Mich., when a boy. In 1883 he came to Ann Arbor as secretary of the university. He held the post until 1908.

In the condemnation case of the Detroit & Ironton Railroad Co., owned by Henry Ford, a Circuit Court jury at Monroe, awarded the heirs in the Whittkop estate, of Dundee township, $3,100 for about 7 acres of land. The amount is virtually the same as offered by the representatives of the company.

Mack Tourtelotte of Fennville, who has been in the hospital at Kalamazoo since November 16, with a broken neck, has returned to his home. His neck was broken when his automobile overturned and he was thrown to the ground, striking on his head.

Joseph A. Martin, former acting mayor and commissioner of purchases and supplies of Detroit, has been exonerated from charges of price fixing among contractors on valves and hydrants, during his administration, by federal investigators.

Two Grand Rapids boys, Bernard S. Kelly, 14 years old, and Albert Ryan, 16 years old, are held at Mobile, Ala., following their escape from jail at Merdian, Tenn., while being held for local officers on a charge of theft of an automobile.

Dorothy Slagh, of Holland, is believed to have set a record for attendance at Sunday School. The girl has not missed Sunday School at the First Reformed church in 11 years, having attended 572 classes in that time.

Detroit's construction record for 1924 was $160,064,794—an increase of $30,345,063 over the record for 1923.

Merger of the Hillsdale Light & Fuel Co., the Coldwater Gas Light & Fuel Co., the Grand Haven Gas Co., and the Monroe Gas Light & Fuel Co., under the name of the Central States Utilities Co., has been announced.

Machinery has been purchased that will double the capacity of the Petoskey Portland Cement Co. plant, and installation will start Feb. 15, according to John L. A. Galster, secretary-treasurer.

The Michigan public utilities commission has raised the Detroit-Mt. Clemens and Detroit-Pontiac bus fares from one-and-a-half to two cents a mile and fixed the minimum fare at five cents, reducing it from 10 cents.

Damage suits aggregating $125,000 will be filed against the Grand Rapids Gas Light Co. by the Federal Compensation Commission, seeking to recover compensation paid relatives of postal employes and those injured in the postoffice explosion Nov 12.

SICK 3 YEARS WITHOUT RELIEF
Finally Found Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound
Columbia, S. C.—"Your medicine has done me so much good that I feel like I owe my life to it. For three years I was sick and was treated by physicians, but they didn't seem to help me any. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got strong enough to do my housework, where before I was hardly able to be up. I have also taken the Vegetable Compound during the Change of Life and it has left me in good health. I recommend it as the best medicine for women in the Change of Life and you can use these facts as a testimonial."—Mrs. S. A. HOLLEY, R. F. D. No. 4, Columbia, South Carolina.
Why suffer for years with backache, nervousness, painful times and other ailments common to women from early life to middle age, when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will bring relief? Take it when annoying symptoms first appear and avoid years of suffering.
In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over 200,000 replies were received, and 98 out of every 100 reported they were benefited by its use.

The Earnest Man

The earnest men are so few in the world that their very earnestness becomes at once the badge of their nobility; and, as men in a crowd instinctively make room for one who seems eager to force his way through it, so mankind everywhere open their ranks to one who rushes zealously toward some object lying beyond them.—Dwight.

Brought up on a Farm
As a young man Dr. Pierce practiced medicine in a rural district and was known far and wide for his great success in alleviating disease. He early moved to Buffalo and put up in ready-to-use form, his Golden Medical Discovery, the well-known tonic for the blood, which is an extract of native roots. This "Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's clears away pimples and annoying eruptions, tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear. It corrects the disordered conditions in a sick stomach, aids digestion, acts as a tonic and enriches the blood. Vim is sure to follow its use. All dealers. Tablets or liquid.

NEGLECT of even the slightest skin rash, roughness, chafing or soreness may have serious consequences. Painful, disfiguring complaints like eczema, ringworm, etc., all start in a small way.
The safest plan is to keep a jar of Resinol Ointment ready to use at the first sign of skin trouble. It promptly stops itching and reduces inflammation and burning. The tiny pores readily receive this soothing ointment, and its healing influence is carried far below the surface of the skin.
Resinol Soap is a favorite with thousands who like its generous lather, so refreshing and cleansing. At all druggists.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Uncle Sam Lets France Know He Won't Stand for War Debt Repudiation.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THERE was considerable excitement in government circles in Washington when the publication of the French budget revealed the fact that it did not include France's war debt to the United States. A spokesman for the administration stated in rather blunt language that this country expects France to recognize the debt and to make immediate arrangements to fund it, pointing out that repudiation would seriously affect international credit. He said the position of this government is that, while we do not wish to be oppressive, we recognize no grounds in law or equity why the debt should be reduced or canceled. On the question of the validity of the debt, the government spokesman pointed out that $1,000,000,000 of the loan had been turned over to France after the war was over and that $400,000,000 more had been credited to France for the purchase of war surplus supplies.

In both the senate and the house the matter came up and the supposed attitude of France was severely criticized. Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, speaking for Secretary Mellon, chairman of the war debt funding commission, set forth the necessity of collection of the debt from France to relieve American taxpayers of that portion of their burden, asserting that repudiation would destroy French credit and intimating that the French attitude would put an end to French borrowings of American bankers.

The French embassy in Washington promptly issued a statement explaining that the American debt was not included in the budget because the law does not permit the inclusion of indeterminable items for payment of which no revenue is provided; and both there and in Paris it was reiterated that France had never intimated that she would repudiate the obligation. This was not enough, however, and Ambassador Herrick conferred with Premier Herriot and Finance Minister Clementel, both of whom repeated the explanation and the assurance that France's intentions were honest, and telegraphed this assurance also to the British government. The truth appears to be that the Herriot government is glad thus to have the French people disabused of the prevalent idea that the debt will be either canceled or materially reduced. In this both political and financial considerations weigh largely, for, until the French public is brought to realize that the American and British debts must be paid, any government that undertakes to pay them will be politically dead; and, in addition, American credit and American tourist trade mean a tremendous lot to France.

According to Washington dispatches, the administration leaders in congress are formulating a plan by which France will be given about thirty days to demonstrate her intention to fund the debt, and if she fails in this it is their purpose to ask the senate to adopt a resolution condemning the attitude of France and expressing disapproval of any further loans or extensions of credit by American bankers or other individuals to the French government or to French citizens. President Coolidge, of course, knows all about this plan and is said to approve its important features, but he has come to no hasty conclusions and still assumes that France intends to propose a fair settlement of the debt.

GERMANY received in sullen and threatening mood the notification from the entente nations that the Cologne bridgehead will not be evacuated on January 10, as was provided in the treaty of Versailles, because of her own failure to observe the terms of the treaty in the matter of disarmament. Foreign Minister Stresemann declared that, unless a compromise were reached, peace in Europe would be dealt a terrible blow, the reconciliation of nations postponed and the fulfillment of the Dawes plan greatly endangered. He warned the allies not to overtax the patience of Germany, which was interpreted to mean that Germany was prepared to reply by making harder trade treaty terms. He said that the machinery in the Krupp gun works had not been dismantled because it was busy on American orders. The German government has demanded that the alleged facts on which the allied control commission based its report and recommendation that the Cologne region be not evacuated should be made public at once. The commission was asked by the allies to rush to Paris all its information on the German failure to disarm, so that they can justify their action in the eyes of the world. This should make most interesting reading. The most important part of the report deals with the methods by which Germany is said to have at least 700,000 men trained and equipped for war. A Paris paper is publishing a series of sensational articles revealing Germany's alleged gigantic preparations for the next conflict. One of these tells of a new and devastating war gas developed by a German scientist, and says great quantities of mustard gas and suffocating gas are also being made.

The German reichstag meets January 5 and Berlin dispatches say Chancellor Marx, Foreign Minister Stresemann and Finance Minister Luther plan to form a nonpolitical directorate with extraordinary powers to deal with the situation temporarily.

GREAT BRITAIN'S invitation to the premiers of the dominions to a conference in London in March to discuss the empire's policy in the matter of the Geneva peace and disarmament protocol, has met a chilly reception in the dominions and their attitude is worrying the government in London not a little, for it amounts to a practical declaration of their complete independence of Great Britain, the only connecting link being a common crown. Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Canada have been exchanging views by cable and mail, trying to arrange to present a common front against Great Britain in the dispute that all feel is certain to come. As for the Geneva protocol, they feel that their own parliaments can decide their stand, and each of them has a membership in the League of Nations.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI of Italy is fighting desperately and so far successfully to maintain his position in the face of the bitterest kind of attacks against him and the Fascisti. The latest development was the publication by the opposition of a memorandum written by Cesare Rossi, former chief of the press bureau of the interior department and now under arrest for connection with the murder of Deputy Matteotti. The document directly imputes to Mussolini the crimes committed by the Fascisti recently, asserting they were committed by his orders. It is generally believed the Rossi charges are unfounded, but they stirred up great excitement and complicated the difficulties under which Mussolini already was laboring. Some of the premier's followers have deserted him and others have urged him to resign, but he still has sufficient support in parliament to retain his position.

SPAIN has succeeded, at considerable cost in lives, in withdrawing her troops in Morocco to the prepared line connecting the coast towns, and hopes to remain there. Abd el Krim, leader of the rebellious tribesmen, last week issued a proclamation in which he said the Riff republic would treat with Spain only on equal terms, "since we are the victors and they are the vanquished." His peace conditions, he said, were:

"Recognition of the republic of the Riff, whose frontiers will be formed by the mouth of the River Kert and the River Marti, in which territory not a single Spanish position must remain nor warships of the vanquished nation exercise vigilance along the coast.

"Spain must agree not to engage Musselmen troops, transferring those in the service here to the borders of the government of the Riff republic; delivery of all Moroccan prisoners without ransom, at the same time paying a heavy sum for the ransom of Spanish prisoners we captured during the last glorious campaign in which our traditional enemy lost more men and materials and suffered more humiliations than three years ago."

SOME three thousand savants gathered in Washington for the sessions of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, divided themselves into 15 sections and proceeded to discuss a varied menu of scientific subjects. One of the addresses that attracted popular attention was that of Dr. Edward L. Rice professor of zoology in Ohio Wesleyan university, in which he characterized the views of W. J. Bryan on evolution as "dogmatic" and "dangerous to religion," and urged more unprejudiced co-operation in scientific and religious study. Mr. Bryan's arguments he said, were deduced "from the assumption of the literary accuracy of the Bible in general and of the first two chapters of Genesis in particular." This assumption was "not Biblical," nor was it "accepted by leading Bible scholars of today," he said.

Dr. W. P. Davey of the General Electric company's research laboratory told of the production of a new form of copper that conducts electricity with 13 per cent more efficiency than the ordinary copper. Dr. E. C. Rosenow of the Mayo Foundation reported the discovery of bacteria that appear to be responsible for the present epidemic of hiccoughs. Favorable results looking toward the control of diabetic symptoms by means of insulin administered by the mouth, instead of hypodermically, as at present, were reported in a paper by Dr. John R. Murlin of the University of Rochester. To overcome the problem of the destruction of insulin by stomach juices, Doctor Murlin said he had prepared insulin tablets which pass through the stomach unaffected and are dissolved in the intestines.

ILLINOIS especially is interested in the result of the civil suit to recover from Gov. Len Small the interest on state funds which he is charged with withholding when he was state treasurer. Judge Burton at Springfield held Small liable to the state for all interest paid by Chicago packers on state funds lent them in 1917 and 1918 and referred the case back to a master in chancery for determination of the amount of indebtedness. Since the Illinois law provides that no one in debt to the state can be elected governor, there was some question whether or not the second inauguration of Small, set for January 12, would be blocked.

WORKING rapidly, the house passed the treasury-post office supply bill, carrying a total of $763,000,000, and sent it on to the senate. Among other items in the bill are $11,000,000 for prohibition enforcement; $20,000,000 for the coast guard service, of which half will be available during the coming year to check liquor smuggling; $2,600,000 for the transcontinental air mail service; $16,656,200 for the customs service and $9,103,101 for the public health service. The house at the close of the week was considering the army appropriation measure.

Senator Norris, chairman of the agricultural committee, introduced a resolution directing the federal trade commission to conduct an inquiry into the doings of the "power trust," which, he charged, is attempting to dictate disposal of the Muscle Shoals property.

NOTABLE among the deaths of the week were those of Leon Bakst, celebrated Russian painter and stage scenery designer, who succumbed to pneumonia in Paris; William Archer, the veteran English dramatic critic and author, and A. Henry Savage-Landor, famous artist and explorer, whose sensational experiences in Tibet were related in his book, "The Forbidden Land."

NOTRE DAME university made good its claim to the intercollegiate football championship by defeating Leland Stanford at Pasadena, Cal., on New Year's day, the score being 27 to 10. The University of California eleven beat the University of Pennsylvania by a score of 14 to 0, the game being played at Berkeley. Both contests were witnessed by immense crowds.

Motor Vehicles Make Steady Popular Growth

New York.—Motor vehicle registrations in the United States show that there is one passenger car or truck for every 6.42 persons, based on an estimated population of 114,000,000.

Registrations during the year, excluding the last ten days of December, totaled 17,700,179, a gain of 16.28 per cent over the total of 15,222,658 recorded in 1923.

These statistics, compiled from official figures obtained from every state, were made public by the magazine Motor.

Passenger cars increased during the year from 13,455,073 to 15,520,663, a gain of 2,065,590, or 15.35 per cent.

Commercial vehicles jumped from 1,767,585 at the end of 1923 to 2,179,516, an increase of 23.3 per cent.

The amount of money invested in these vehicles is estimated at $10,620,107,400.

New York leads in registrations with 1,412,050, of which 1,136,300 are passenger cars. California is second with 1,321,480, and is less than 10,000 behind on passenger cars, which number 1,126,956. Other states in the 1,000,000 class are Illinois and Ohio.

The second five in order are: Michigan, 877,453; Texas, 823,074; Massachusetts, 672,315;; Indiana, 649,787; Iowa, 614,500.

Results of the two prosperous years in the South are shown by heavy percentage gains.

Abundant proof that the motor vehicle is "here to stay."

The price of land in Virginia is lower and the market price of crops is much higher. Virginia Lands valued at 40% less per acre produce crops worth 62% more than average for the United States, as shown by the statistical records. You can buy Virginia Land at 30% to 40% lower price per acre and receive practically 62% more net money for your crops. On account of Virginia being closer to big Eastern Markets better prices are secured, less freight. For instance, when the price of Corn in Virginia was $1.00 per bushel it was 59 cents to 68 cents per bushel in Western States, and the same is true in comparison of all crops. The average yield per acre in Virginia, with proper cultivation, is practically that of the Western States. In Virginia you can grow all Grains, Grass, Fruits, Poultry, Live Stock, Etc. Volcnoes Furnish Power

Not very recently we saw an article referring to the steam issuing from volcanic fissures and hot springs being economized for power and the other day we saw one more article. As a matter of fact, there is untold horse power going entirely to waste in the West, particularly in Yellowstone Park, the home of many hot gushing springs or geysers of boiling water, but to the Italian nation belongs the credit of first harnessing the giant to the steam engine and generating electric currents sufficient for running factories and lighting vast cities. In western America almost on the Pacific coast, stands Mount Lassan, the only active volcanic peak in this country, and all about this mountain are evidences of a terrific heat down in the bowels of the earth. No doubt in time borings will be made in the volcanic rock for live steam and the energy used to drive monstrous steam engines whose duty it will be to furnish electric current to speed the cannon ball express on its way and turn night's gloom into day.

Until such time as the United States government sees fit to grant privileges to individuals to go into Yellowstone Park and experiment nothing will come of the great quantities of live steam going to waste.

In Italy electricity taken from volcanic heat is sent over the wires to Florence, Leghorn, Piombino, and other cities and towns for light and power. Italian engineers are now using some energy that has for centuries gone to waste and that has caused such great loss of life and property in that ancient land.

Borings are being made now on the slopes of Etna and also on the islaud of Vulcano which is one of the Lipari group north of Sicily. The Lipari Islands are subsidiary peaks of Stambouli, whose crater was supposed by the ancients to be entrancc to Pluto's fiery realm. Vulcano was thought to be the headquarters of the blacksmith gcd. The rumblings of his bellows and the clangings of his anvil were heard deep down in the earth.

The famous region of Tuscany north-west of Rome, is the scene of numerous natural steam wells, called "puffing holes." About 40 square miles of country in this area is underlaid by a constant steam pressure coming from below. These puffing holes go down to great depths and all derive their steam from some underground cauldron. Out of them the steam spurts in vigorous jets, some of them forming small lake-like craters that are filled with boiling water.

The TRUANT SOUL

by VICTOR ROUSSEAU

COPYRIGHT BY W.G.CHAPMAN

WHO gets closer to life than a doctor? What other person comes more directly into daily contact with its romance, its hopes and defeats, its sordidness and its uplifting qualities? Who else has the drama of it all so constantly before his eyes?

This strange tale, eerie and mystifying in part, but filled with passionate interest and charm is the romance of a surgeon. Its heroine is a nurse. Its strongest scenes are in a sanitarium. One of its most effective climaxes takes place at an operating table. Edifying and thrilling; a story that engages the mind and the heart and does not permit interest to lapse for an instant. One of the most unusual and satisfactory of Victor Rousseau's many remarkable stories.

A Few Remarks About Abe Lincoln

"Honest Old Abe" Lincoln looms up to us still larger and mightier as successive Februarys come and go and the years lengthen out since the great Civil War which involved brother against brother. From The Illinois Watch Co. we received copy of the following and we thought it good enough to print and inasmuch as this company annually spends thousands of dollars putting out Lincoln medals to encourage the students of our high schools to wake up their literary ability, we think the company is entitled to some credit, and that reminds us that James Meeks of our high scheol, won the Lincoln medal last seasou.

HIS MECHANICAL GENIUS

Lincoln possessed mechanical genius. With rude tools he built cabins and fiat boats. Even in his public and professional life he often indulged in mechanical dreams In his navigation of western waters, his craft frequently lodged on shifting shoals and bars. He contrived an apparatus of which a bellows was the animating principle. This bellows was folded to the hull of the boat When occasion demanded. it could be inflated for the pnrpose of lifting tne craft over the obstruction. He whittled out a model which is now preserved in the patent office at Washington. A patent was issued to him but it is not certain that the navigation of western rivers were revolutionized by it.

Lincoln acquired much of his law knowledge by reading borrowed books under an oak tree near Old Salem. Day after day and week after week he sat in the shade of the tree and moved as the sun shifted the shadows. One historian says that he was so much absorbed that some people thought and remarked he was crazy.

HE DIDN'T DRINK

It has been a favorite hobby with historians and writers to paint Lincoln as a total abstainer from mischievous liquors, and we hope that such is true. As captain in the Black Hawk war Lincoln regaled his soldiers with stories and jests. He recounted his adventures in Kentucky and Indiana, and brought Aesop's fables down to date. Frequently his pleased auditors passed the whiskey jug to him, but his invariable reply was: "Thank you, I never drink."

In "A Man for The Ages" written concerning Lincoln, the author fails to show Lincoln's temperance attributes.

We beg the most humble pardon of our readers for referring to it, but right here it comes to us that Abe Lincoln was somewhat of a fighter with his fists. In the rude days in Kentucky when corn whiskey was "nothing at all" and everybody had plenty of it for thirst, the bullies used to doll up with a few drinks and go to barn raisings and the like. Always before the wind-up there was a fight and likely as not a murder and Lincoln was present on many of these occasions. Several times we have correct reports of the encounters in which Mr. Lincoln took a hand and his immense size and great physical strength always made him the winner. Writers have quoted Lincoln variously in regard to temperance, but the truth still remains that when a young man he partook of this raw frontier whiskey.

Let us believe he did not under any circumstances use it excessively but as a medical dose to relieve fevers and ague which raged in the backwoods of those days.

See Xmas Trees As Michigan Farm Crop

Raising Christmas trees as a farm crop in Michigan is the logical solution of the problem arising from the demand that Christmas tree cutting be abandoned in order to save the state forests, according to Prof. A. K. Chittenden, head of the forestry department at the M. A. C.

"The use of Christmas trees is so beautiful a custom in the traditions of the American nation that it should not be abandoned," declares Chittenden. Their use is interwoven in the sentiment of Christmas celebrations, and there seems to be nothing to take their place The destruction of forests can be prevented, however, if farm grown stocks of evergreens are developed

There are a great many farms throughout not only Michigan but the entire country as well that have small areas of land unsuited to ordinary farming. Such places are said to be ideal for Christmas tree planting. Tree plantations will also often pay even on valuable land.

The Norway spruce is the tree best adapted for Christmas tree plantations, according to Professor Chittenden. It has a rapid rate of growth, a beautiful shape and rather rigid branches. From six to eight years will produce good sized Christmas trees, but smaller table size trees can be grown in less time.

WOMEN SPEAKERS TO HAVE MANUAL

Democratic Committee Issues Special Text Book for Use of Fair Campaigners.

RECORDS OF PARTIES GIVEN

Principal National Issues Explained in Form Readily Understood by Feminine Voters.

Washington, D. C.—For the first time in the history of politics, a textbook of campaign material, giving party records, sample speeches, "don'ts for women speakers" and a selection of political jingles and songs has been issued for the use of women campaigners. The book, which is just off the press, is "The Women's Democratic Campaign Manual" and is issued by the Democratic National Committee.

The Women's Manual is issued in attractive form and typing, and besides containing the usual campaign powder for attacking the Republican Administration and party record, it also has instructive information for the campaigner, and in the songs, jokes and jingles offers her a selection to add a lighter touch to her speech.

The manual opens with biographies of John W. Davis and Charles W. Bryan, which are written in human interest style, with emphasis upon the points in the careers of both men most inclined to interest women. Of Mr. Davis it is said "that his record as a public servant shows him a supporter of the matters that pertain to Democratic interests and sympathetic to the things for which women stand in politics." Mr. Bryan's statement, made in his acceptance speech, welcoming the participation of women in politics, is quoted.

A review of the respective attitudes of the Democratic and Republican parties toward women voters is given, and it is claimed that as "first aid to the innocent in politics, as aider of women in their determination to stand for progressive measures and candidates the Democratic party is far in advance of its Republican opponent."

The history of the fight for the suffrage amendment is given in brief, and the prominent part played by the Democratic party and President Wilson in obtaining the vote for women is outlined.

Discusses Chief Issues

The major portion of the book is devoted to setting forth the six chief issues in the campaign, in a form readily understood by women voters and quickly available for women speakers. These issues are Conservation, in which is given a review of the Naval oil reserve scandals; the Tariff, in which it is explained how the high protective Fordney-McCumber Act is a great burden on the housekeeper and wife, as she expends the family budget; Foreign Relations, in which the attitude of the Democratic party is set forth in comparison with the Republican party's attempted backdoor "bootlegging participation" in the World Court; a comparison of the records of the two parties in sponsoring social welfare legislation; a comparison of the labor records, in which it is shown that Mr. Davis' labor stand is 100 per cent, and concluding with a relation of the civil service scandals in the Republican Administration of 1921-1924.

A chapter in the book is devoted to setting forth the record of the Democratic party on Child Labor laws, showing how the only two Federal laws ever enacted were by that party. Mr. Davis' record and campaign utterances on Child Labor are given in full, including his statement that if he were a member of a State legislature, he would vote to ratify the Child Labor amendment.

Women are invited to study the record of Calvin Coolidge, when as Governor of Massachusetts he was reputed to have halted the Boston police strike, thus laying the foundation for the "Coolidge myth of calmness, coolness and courage," the book states. The stand of Charles G. Dawes, the Republican vice-presidential candidate, against union labor and favoring the open shop is given. An "Oil Primer" of facts on the Naval oil reserves scandal and a list of Republican scandals are other chapters intended to furnish material for attack upon the opposing forces.

In "Mother Goose in Politics" a number of rhymes are given, of which this is a sample:

"POOR TOMMIE!

"Little Tommie Tucker pines for his supper—
But what can he eat? He can't afford butter.
And how can he slice bread without any knife?
This Republican tariff has blasted his life!"

A number of prominent women have contributed to the book including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York; Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, vice-chairman of the Democratic National Committee; Mrs. Izetta Jewell Brown; "Ma" Ferguson; Mrs. Halsey

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON SAVING AND INVESTING

Aunt Emmy and Maud were talking about saving money.

"What does a savings bank do with the money people put in it, Aunt Emmy?" inquired Maud.

"It is invested in sound mortgages, perhaps, or government and corporation securities. You see, the men who run savings banks are trained financiers. They know what securities are good and what are questionable, so they invest the bank's funds—that is, the money they receive from their depositors—in the best securities in such a way that they will be able to pay you interest on your deposits and be able to return your money to you when you want it. In order to do that they must invest in securities that pay a higher rate of interest than they give you to cover the bank expenses and set aside a surplus against emergencies."

"But, Aunty, if the banks invest our money, why can't we invest it ourselves?"

"We could if we knew as much about investments as the bank does. Bankers are not likely to make the mistakes made by the ordinary person. They are not deceived by impressive looking stock certificates, plausible letters from brokers or charming voices over the telephone urging them to buy this or that. Your banker is a hard-headed business man who investigates thoroughly before he invests the bank's money. For this reason many conservative persons prefer to keep their savings in a savings bank, knowing that their money is in wise hands and that even though the rate of interest they get may be moderate their money is far safer than it would be if it were invested less skillfully."

"Surely, though, it must be possible to get more than 4 per cent on your money and yet be safe," Maud said.

"It is under certain conditions," Aunt Emmy agreed. "The trouble is that so few people are frank about their money matters with men who really can be trusted for advice. They would rather take the advice of a glib stock salesman. No matter how small a sum a person is thinking of investing, advice should be sought from a trust company or bank. Women especially don't seem to realize this.

"The savings bank is always safe. It is a good plan to keep putting money in the savings bank until you have a good sum. Then withdraw part and invest it in some security paying a higher rate of interest. But be sure to seek good advice before you buy. In this way you can always have some cash on hand in the bank, yet gradually convert most of your savings into high grade securities." — ANNE B. AYMES.

THE BURDEN OF GOVERNMENT

The financial burden of government has become increasingly heavy in recent years. It has, at times, reached the point of oppression. The Federal tax of 1920 aggregated more than five and one-half billion dollars. This year, after strenuous efforts to reduce the war-time peak, the total still exceeds three billion dollars—a sum far greater than the entire burden of funded debt accumulated as a result of the Civil War. State and local taxes have increased at an even greater rate. Taxation has become more than a problem; it is a threat of impending disaster.

Nor is the burden of government limited to taxation. We are oppressed by a multiplicity of restrictive laws and administrative regulations. It is estimated that there are over two million laws and ordinances in the records of nation, states and municipalities. One adult person out of every twenty engaged in business or industry is a government official, agent or employee.

In the face of this record, despite the general recognition of the overwhelming burden of government, we find ourselves constantly waging a defensive battle against plans and programs which would transfer still greater duties to government, which would hamper individual initiative still further, which will—if put into practice—crush individual ambition and destroy individual opportunity.

Under these circumstances it is our right—it is our duty—to affirm and defend sound principles of political faith as we have, on other occasions, supported sound principles of economic progress. The Constitution of the United States has stood for 135 years as the bulwark of our individual and our collective liberties. The Constitution has been and is now the greatest existing restraint upon an arrogant majority. It has been and is now the greatest existing defence of the very minorities which, at this time, are being led to denounce its restrictions.

One of our greatest needs is to repel the attacks now being made upon the integrity of this charter of our freedom. We should—we must—oppose vigorously all efforts to give Congress the power to override decisions of the Supreme Court—and thereby destroy the division of governmental power which is the inherent strength of our constitutional system.—Walter W. Head, American Bankers Association.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

What Is A Good Citizen?

"Hold fast to the high ideals that flash upon your vision in hours of exaltation."

Frances E. Willard.

The word citizen has two uses in present day speech, one signifying merely an inhabitant; the other, an exact one, signifying a political status. A Christian citizen is a follower of Jesus Christ who relates his Christian principles to political action.

In other days it was thought that because politics were in the hands of corrupt men a Christian could not participate in them. In these days the true relation of the kingdom of Heaven to earthly government is being better understood.

Three thousand years ago the Psalmist sang, "For the Kingdom is the Lord's and He is the Government among the nations." And later the prophet said, "the government shall beupon His shoulders." There is no doubt of the purpose of our God as relates to His supremacy in the affairs of earth as these and many other passages of Holy Writ determine.

It remained for our Lord to set the task before His people when He taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven.', This is the first petition of the prayer. Before we ask anything for ourselves we pray the kingdom of God may come in the earth.

How shall the kingdom come? Those who love the kingdom must bring it—it cannot be supposed that any others will care to do so. The friends of Christ must bring His will in the earth. Who are His friends? "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you.' What is the command? "Go ye therefore and teach all nations.. teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Since that day loyal Christian hearts have burned with missionary fervor and sacrifices untold have been made to bring the message of Jesus Christ as a personal Savior to men and women in lands afar.

But Jesus Christ came to save nations as well as individuals. The Gospel is one of personal devotion but it is a gospel of social regeneration as well. It is a gospel of constructive goodness, but quite as much one of destruction of evil. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."

The bringing of the Kingdom by personal uprightness and cleansing of society as an aid to this, is comprehended in "the triumph of Christ's Golden Rule in custom and in law."

It requires no process of reasoning to see that if custom and law are to be created for Christ, the processes by which they are created must be in the hands of Christ. His followers in the earth are His delegated representatives, hence all who profess His name must have as their definite task the bringing of the kingdom.

Neither did the Lord leave us without personal example. In two instances recorded he met the standard of a good citizen, both times paying the tribute money to the government under which He lived, and the last time adding the admonition. "Render therefore unto Caesar's and unto God the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." Devotion to country and to God are linked very closely in this word.

To be a good citizen, to render best possible service to one's country, is the responsibility of every one who receives the benefits and protection of government. But good citizenship is particularly the duty of the Christian, for the definite task of bringing the Kingdom in the world is his. It is therefore the purpose of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to rally a "greater army for the [great er task." A survey of social conditions will drive home the conviction that enforcement of law is the most needed contribution to good government at this time. How, then, shall good citizens function in this particular?

1—Let them implicitly obey the law themselves.

2—Discourage violation by declining indulgence in liquor among friends.

3—Courteously protest against jests at prohibition in movies, periodicals or in social intercouse.

4—Carry plans for co-operation in law enforcement into every organization to which they belong.

5—Co-operate with public school teachers to secure emphasis on scientific temperance teaching and citizenship study, with law observance specially stressed.

6—Secure the same co-operation in colleges.

7—Give great attention to the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, Baptist Young People's Union Luther League, Lcyal Temperance Legion, and all other young people's societies. Assist their Good Citizenship committees to properly plan and function.

8—Study all public questions; the policy of every political party toward them, and the attitude of every aspirant for office.

9—Pay poll tax, if required in your state.

10—Register if necessary and induce others to do so.

11—Attend all caucuses, vote at primaries and final elections.

12—Uphold the officers now in charge of law enforcement. Offer your assistance if needed. Commend any good work they do. Protest when it is proper to do so. Secure removal from office when unfit. As a part of this program be sure that at every election officials are secured who will live up to their oath of office.

Finally, and most important and far-reaching of all, pray for our beloved country and its officiary. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." God can as marvellously move the hearts of sinful men today as in the Crusade year. We do not know what our God would do, how speedily He would clear troubled skies and ease aching hearts and strengthen weak convictions if we would but beseech His aid. What other weapon should a Christian citizen so confidently use as the one that pertains particularly to his equipment? "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit and watching thereunto with all perserverance."

"The greater army for the greater task," to its knees!

Clancy on The Gas Tax

The Hillsdale Daily quotes Denis Clancy's remarks on the gas tax and other matters pertaining to the issuing of 1925 licenses and of course it is natural for the Daily to quote Hillsdale's favorite sons, but we find after reading Clancy's little dissertation we don't quite get the drift of his remarks. Evidently Denis don't just know how the populace stands on this momentous question which so grippingly effects our pocketbook and yours and also Clancy's as he drives an automobile same as the rest of us plebeians.

We might say that that is a mighty good stand in our opinion for a legislator to take until his pin feathers are out anyhow. In the sedate and impressive halls of Michigan's congress these young fledgelings are like newly hatched chicks—they are to be fed and coddled, eventually launched out on life's career—in fact brought up as they "brought up father" We quote Clancy as follows:

"While at the present time it appears from reports that gas tax advocates in the legislature are credited with membership in an undesirable "bloc' still it is evident that the people of the state want a gas tax,"

That's good so far. Again we quote

"A weight tax as it is now advocated throws the burden of the tax on the heavy users of gas. On the whole this is the class that pays the least general property tax and is trying to escape their just amout of road tax. The farmer and the small business man who drives the light car and fewer miles will profit by the gas tax because he will be taxed in proportion to his use of roads."

That's right. Both correct as a book; now which does the newly elected congressman believe in? We don't know, he don't, Groesbeck don't know, and we'll bet a ten spot nine tenths of the legislators up at Lansing don't know nor dc they care. The main issue is to secure some funds to build roads ostensibly—but really to have a little tin in the treasury.

Oh you needn't worry. Those boys up at Lansing will fix the tax business so the money will have to come, and the chances are the burden of it will have to come from the tiller of the soil, same as it always has. He being the least "scrappy" and having the least to say about where our money shall go or where it shall come from, will naturally be the bird they'll light on the heaviest. The cute chaps who make the laws for us to follow are talking this thing and that thing; first a weight tax—which tickles the farmerite half to death; then a gas tax which tickles him still more, then Alas! when its all over but the kicking "the poor common peepul" will wake up and find the tax is about where it was before—right in the solar plexus of the man behind the plow. This road tax question has been bruited about until it is maggoty, and as we find by Clancy's remarks we are not yet arrived as to who are the proper ones to pay it.

The embarassing situation is that they have talked putting up a heavy weight tax—thinking it would effect the millionaires mostly—but the joke has fallen flat. It don't quite work out. Then they talk of putting a couple of cents more on the price of gas—as we suppose to coax the John D. Rockefeller crowd to lower the price a little and that don't theorize properly—so what are the poor legislators going to do anyhow?

The smart politician these days will talk in parables purely and indicate his sentiments with his digits alone, so that when he has saidhis say the electorate will know just where he stands—and that is mostly like the Colossus of Rhodes allowing all such issues to go betwixt and between.

Mr. Clancy, we are positive, will endeavor to get the real voice of his district, and proceed accordingly.

Thirty State Farm Groups Plan Meets

More than 30 of the leading agricultural groups and associations of the state will hold meetings at the M. A. C. this winter during the annual Farmers Week, from Feb. 2 to 6, according to announcement made here this week by the college farm week committee.

The Michigan State Farm Bureau and the Michigan Improved Livestock Breeders and Feeders Association are the groups representing the largest membership among those scheduled to meet during the week. The 20 special subordinate breed associations which are included under the parent organization will hold individual meetings of their own, in addition to the general livestock meetings.

Other bodies included in the list of those who are to be at East Lansing the first week in February are: Michigan Crop Impovement Association; Michigan Potato Producers Association; Michigan Soils Association; Michigan Muck Farmers Association; Michigan Poultry Association; Michigan Nurserymens Association: Farm Economic Association; Vinegar Manufacturers Associations; The M. A. C. Short Course Association; and the Michigan Press Association.

All the usual entertainment and educational features which have marked Farmers Week of recent years will be included this year, along with a new line of exhibits and what is called the strongest line up of speakers ever gathered for an agricultural conference in the state.

LA FOLLETTE REAL PEOPLE'S MAN

Has Been Staunch and Valiant Defender of Public Interests.

By ALBERT O. BARTON
Author of "LaFollette's Winning of Wisconsin."

LaFollette took his seat in the senate in January, 1906. He has three times been re-elected, in each instance by overwhelming vote of the people of Wisconsin.

He had been in his seat but a few weeks when he made one of the longest and most notable speeches of the session on the Hepburn railroad rate bill, which revealed him as one of the authorities on the subject, and foreshadowed the leading part he has taken in railroad legislation since. In that and the sessions following he took an active part in legislation on the great problems relating to tariff, finance, transportation and conservation, with an eye single to the public interest as opposed to special privilege legislation.

True Friend of Soldiers.

It was on the outbreak of the World war that LaFollette proved himself of the mold of heroes who can remain true to their ideals in hours of supreme trial. He opposed the precipitate entrance of the United States into the war, which was demanded by the money-lenders, the munition makers and profiteers. He foresaw that this war, like most wars of history, would lead to the setting back of the wheels of progress, the losing of the ground gained for popular government, the probable loss of thousands of lives and millions of dollars in property, the abrogation of freedom of speech and press, the imposition of crushing burdens of taxation, and an era of hatred, violence and intolerance, with dictatorships and intensified national jealousies. Against all this he counseled moderation. He believed congress should have the power to declare war and that it was the duty of its members to vote their honest convictions for or against it. As the leader of the group that dared to stand out against immediate participation, he had to bear the brunt of a storm of abuse, vilification and misunderstanding such as seldom has descended upon the head of a public servant.

Son Goes to War.

With war declared, however, he urged its effective prosecution and sent his son into the service. He opposed the declaration of war, the draft act and the espionage law, inveighed against the censorships and arbitrary arrests, but held that a law once made must be obeyed until repealed.

LaFollette favored every bill to better the condition of the soldiers and sailors. He secured an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the benefit of soldiers and their dependents during the Mexican troubles. He voted to increase the pay of soldiers sent abroad; favored every appropriation bill to support the army and navy. He fought the hardest fight of his life to make war profits bear a reasonable proportion of war taxes, and it was largely through his efforts that taxes on the poor man's table—tea, coffee, cocoa and sugar—were defeated.

Activity Increases.

LaFollette never was more active in the senate than he has been in the past year or two. The investigations into the Teapot Dome and other oil steals of the Harding administration and still more recent ones into the prices of sugar and gasoline were largely set on foot and directed by him. He led the fight defeating the $300,000,000 proposed exemption of foreign trade corporations in the 1921 tax bill, and he halted the move of the Harding administration for legislation to pay $500,000,000 of the government's money to the railroads before the railroads had paid what they owed the government on account of valuable new equipment bought for them by the government during wartime operation.

LaFollette is emphatically a people's man. He has been proof against any temptation to be anything else. He has put aside the allurements which ease and privilege have offered, and has borne inevitable abuse and misunderstanding in order that the cause of human freedom might be advanced.

Bad for Public

"I do not oppose Government ownership of the railroads on behalf of the present owners of the railroads, many of whom would obtain safety in Government bonds in return for securities which have not paid a return in years. I oppose Government ownership of the railroads because I believe that it would be bad for our people as a whole. It would open the way to Government ownership of everything, and at the same time it would certainly lead to the wrecking of our highly essential railway service, if the lessons of experience offered by other nations mean anything at all to us."

TARIFF HURTS FARMERS

Republican Law Fosters Price-Fixing And Raises Living Costs.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Republican partisans who point to the tariff as a boon to farmers and a blessing to labor are read a good lecture in an editorial in the Milwaukee Journal a few days ago.

"Under the system of price-fixing fostered by the Fordney-McCumber tariff," says the Journal, "the average farmer has no chance to save money long. For the tariff enters into nearly everything he does not produce on his own land; and as farm prices go up other prices keep a leap ahead."

The editorial then declares that "labor, too, is told that the tariff has maintained good wages and upheld the standard of living," and then points out that "all the time large employers were bringing thousands of foreigners into this country."

Youngsters Exhibit 290 Pigs

Fourteen banks in Lee County, Iowa, recently co-operated with the Breeders' Association in conducting a boys' and girls' club rally. The boys and girls brought in the best pigs that they were raising and exhibited them for $150 in cash prizes which the banks contributed.

Quincy, Illinois, bankers are offering pure bred boars and high grade seed corn to the value of $500 to farmers who attend the Adams County Fair. These prizes will be distributed by lot to farmers of each township, the amount to be based on the township attendance at the fair.

The Missouri Bankers Association inter-county contest for boys' and girls' clubs is the result of action taken at the annual convention, when $1,600 was provided for premiums. The premiums, not less than $25 each, are to be awarded to counties to pay the expenses of club winners to junior farmers' week at the Missouri College of Agriculture; $100 is to be used to pay the expenses of the state champion demonstration team to the meeting of the Bankers Association, where the team will present its winning demonstration.

Then they were at the beach, and the center of a joyous activity. Gibbs was settled, with the plaid, on a warm curve of rocks, where he pulled his cap over his eyes and watched them all placidly. Lizzie found another natural chair, where she sank down with her baby, gazing with dreamy content at the glittering water, steeped in the peace that the tugging, busy little lips at her breast seemed to enhance rather than interrupt. Then little Ellen was settled on the pillows under the umbrella, and Lizzie gayly joined the workers. A hundred times, on this memorable happy day, Ellen found herself watching Lizzie's little white figure, her happy, youthful face. Lizzie was just twenty: what might have been her destiny at twenty?

The tireless, sweet green water rose and fell; each wave formed an emerald arch of itself before it broke with a long, splitting crash, to rush in, level and incredibly swift, flinging upward against impeding rocks, and curving over the white sand. Gibbs watched it a delicious lull of body and soul. So much of it—such splendidly wasted beauty and energy, year after year. How pitiful was even the fullest, even the longest human life, against this glorious miracle that went on year after year throughout the centuries, that had been as old as the world when Padre Junipera Serra walked along these shores.

Joe clattered near him on the rocks. He tilted the cap over his eyes a trifle and glanced at the absorbed group by the fire.

"Manage to speak to me alone a minute, sometime, will you, Joe?" Gibbs said.

Joe, not moving his eyes from the defiant crab that had wedged his little body tightly in a crevice of rock, cleared his throat.

"Sure!" he answered gruffly.

Ellen also had her word alone with Joe. It was after luncheon, when Lizzie had curled up, like a child on a patch of warm sand, and fallen asleep, and Gibbs was apparently dozing. Tommy was wading along the bubbling line of foam, and the baby slept on.

"You knew Harriet and George were here last summer, Joe?" Ellen ventured. "Do you ever see Harriet now?"

"No," he answered, indifferently. "She's a queer sort of girl. What's she doing—collecting plates?"

"She has a remarkable china collection," Ellen admitted.

"China collection! What's that for a woman to do!" Joe stretched comfortably in the sun. "Oh, well," he said leniently, "that's all right, if she likes it. Harriet's nice enough, but she's spoiled by too much money."

"Yet you liked her very much once, Joe," Ellen suggested, from the depth of deep amusement and satisfaction.

"Oh, yes—kid love! I never really loved any one but Lizzie," said Joe. Ellen saw that he really believed it, and with a great sigh of thankfulness she laid one of life's ghosts to rest forever. "I'd like to go down to Los Antonios some day," Joe mused, "and see what sort of opening there might be—well, for instance, in starting a paper there. I haven't said anything to Lizzie, but I talked to Gibbs about it. I'd like to live here, and have a little bungalow, and a bunch of kids, and I think Lizzie'd go crazy! I'm seriously thinking about it. I could have a little jitney and go back and forth—"

"You could have a slice of Arcady," Ellen promised eagerly; "we've twenty acres here, and there are dozens of house-sites!"

"We'll see." Joe yawned again, blinking at the sun. "By the way, Ellen," he added, more animatedly. "You knew that Lillian had remarried?"

"Just that, through George. Have you heard anything more? It was Lindsay Pepper, of course?"

"It was Lindsay Pepper. But the strange thing, young George Lathrop told me, was that she didn't really want to do it. She and the old lady don't hit it off at all well, and all his money comes from his mother. Besides that, Lillian would rather have been a rich widow, you know—at all events, she did deliberately try to get out of it."

"But, Joe, I don't see why she couldn't!"

"Oh, he had a tremendous hold on her. You see his name was mixed up with hers in the whole business. If she didn't care for him, she never should have been away from home the night of the accident! I suppose he simply forced her hand. Funny thing," Joe added, reminiscently. "When I first met her she had all the cards: beauty, youth, a rich man's wife. Now she's married to a man four years younger than herself, who isn't exactly a teetotaler, you know, and whom she supports—well, that's coming to her."

"Poor Lillian!" Ellen said, thoughtfully. Her eyes went to Gibbs, dozing on the rocks, and a sorrowful look filled them. "I wish I hadn't hated her!" she said softly.

"You haven't much to regret!" Joe assured her, rolling over for a nap. They did not speak again until the car grated on the sandy road a few feet above them.

They all saw that the day had tired Gibbs. He was a little stiff as Joe helped him to the car, and there was an anxious look in Ellen's eyes until she had him established in the spacious, pleasant order of the porch again, and was personally superintending his slow drinking of a glass of milk.

But he seemed to recover rapidly. Presently he was smiling and listening again in his usual way, and Ellen went off with Lizzie, to share the delight of preparing the baby for bed, and to talk over little Ellen's last meal for the day.

Tommy, in a glorious splashing and spattering, was profusely watering the garden, and Joe came over to the couch and sat down by Gibbs' side.

"I'm afraid our descending on you this way has been a good deal of a tax," Joe said regretfully.

Gibbs had been lying with closed eyes, and the sunken hollows about them filled Joe with concern. But now he opened them and smiled, and stretched out a hand to clasp Joe's fingers.

"Always welcome, at any time, dear boy," he said kindly. "But more than ordinarily welcome now. I had thought of sending for you—but one puts things off—and there's always the danger of alarming Ellen—"

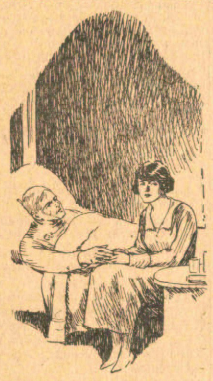
Never had Joe felt the other man's extraordinary charm as he felt it now, when Gibbs Josselyn, at the end of a perfect September day, confided to his care the things he loved best in life.

"You see, old man, she's going to need you soon. And that is why I am glad you are really interested in establishing yourself in Los Antonios. She'll go away, for awhile, but she loves this place—and if you and Lizzie and a troop of children are here—

"You and Lizzie will look out for her," Gibbs added, after a silence. "And the baby will do more than any one! And I think of her, with books, and her garden, and Tommy, and Tommy's music— He's an odd child, but she understands him, and his mistakes won't be the ordinary mistakes—"

He smiled at Joe, and somehow Joe smiled back, although the younger man felt tears hot behind his eyes.

"Won't be my mistakes," Gibbs said musingly. "It was all too easy for me. It was always plain sailing, and that's not—not exactly disciplinary, you know. I never cared much about the other fellow's troubles—Ellen's the one for that—and now, lying here, Joe, for the past few months, it's come to me as a sort of revelation that even in this I'm having it easy. If I've never had any particular pity for the fellows who haven't enough money, or had sick wives, or had to sit on an office stool eight hours a day—I certainly can't expect the world to stand still with sympathy because one man happens to be going out a little ahead of time!"



He Heard the Quick Rise of Her Breast, and Felt a Faint Tightening of Her Fingers.

Joe could find nothing to say, and after a moment Gibbs spoke again, more briskly:

"Well! There was another thing I wanted to say to you, and I'll say it, and then we needn't take this up again. George Lathrop was here last summer, and we went into this a little. He seemed to feel that we might be making too much of this, and he sent a specialist down from San Francisco—Ellen never knew why he came; he happened to have been in Williams with me, and his wife came, and all that. But that's not the point: the thing is that I know how George feels about Ellen; he's always adored her. I mean that he makes a sort of a little patron saint of her. Every other woman in his life is judged by Ellen. Now, some day—she'll be lonely; Tommy'll need a man's hand, George will be his guardian, anyway—some day, George will tell her—he can't help it—what she is to him! And that's where I want you to use your own judgment, Joe. I can't tell her this, of course. And also there's a chance that she may honestly not want to marry any one! But if she lets any thought of me—

"You might tell her then," he added, in a low tone, "that the purest and best and sweetest thing in my life was what she gave me—that no man ever owed a woman the debt I owe her!"

The voice stopped. It was twilight now; there was no more sunlight under the oaks, and Tommy and his hose were gone. The ocean moved like molten lead, wrinkling softly into opalescent gray and blue and silver.

"Well!" Gibbs said briefly. "That's all."

In the long silence Lizzie slipped out and buried the glimmer of her white gown in a wide porch chair.

"If this isn't Heaven!" she breathed, contentedly. A moment later Tommy's little twilight concert began. They could see a pool of warm red light about the piano, in the big sitting room, and Ellen's bent dark head and the little dark head over her shoulder.

"There will be a splendid moon tonight," Gibbs told them.

He and Ellen watched it together, hours later, when Tommy was long in bed, and when Lizzie and Joe had stumbled away, as happily tired and just as sleepy as Tommy, the child, was.

Then Ellen sat in her favorite seat, a low hassock beside his couch, so that her arms lightly rested against him, and their fingers were laced. They had no light, and could look across the low, broad rail of the porch, straight into the sleeping garden, and down the sloping sides of the little canyon to the sea.

"Et in Arcadia ego," Ellen said.

"We've had more than one Arcady, Ellen," her husband answered. "And this has seemed to me not less perfect, somehow, because it is not to last!"

He heard the quick rise of her breast, and felt a faint tightening of her fingers.

"It has seemed right, somehow, to spend this year with you and Tommy, here—hasn't it been a perfect year!"

"I won't allow you to talk so, Gibbs," she said, determinedly, but unsteadily.

"Just this once!" he answered, and she could tell by his tone that he was smiling. His wonderful smile—the smile he had given little snubbed Ellen Latimer, when he drove her to New York in his car!

"No formal goodbys," Gibbs said. "Not that! For if you don't know what you are to me, Ellen, what I've felt as you poured all your goodness and sweetness and faith over me—"

With a sudden movement she laid her face against his hand, and he felt that her eyes were wet.

"Gibbs, please—!"

"Well, I won't. But there's one thing—! When Tommy's older, tell him the truth. There's a time in a boy's life when it makes a lasting impression on him to realize that you—you can't play with fire. You pay, one way or another. I'm paying this way. There's too much else for a man to do, Ellen—too many things need changing for any sane man, or any woman, to go right on into the thirties with the egotism of the teens. And that brings me to the other thing. Some day, if you feel like it, I wish you'd do something for some kid who has gotten himself in wrong with the authorities—I don't know exactly how—I wonder, now lying here, how I could ever have lived in a big city, and not realized that there are fellows who haven't anything like my natural advantages, and who get up against misunderstandings and misinterpretations—"

"I thought," Ellen said steadily, "that when you are better, if we ever go back, I'd go to Mary Cutter, because she is interested in all that sort of thing, and just follow the cases in some court. One couldn't do much, of course. But there would always be something, a visit to a mother, or perhaps a word here or there—"

"What a little saint you are, Ellen! Just a little inspired saint, that's all!" Gibbs exclaimed. "That's just what I mean. The law is all right, of course. It must be what it is. But I tell you, Ellen, that it's enough to drive the decency and the good out of any man. The coldness, the carelessness, the smells, and dirt—"

"You must forget all about it," she said. "You never did anything to deserve a prison experience—it was all a horrible mistake!"

"It was a mistake from a human standpoint," Gibbs conceded thoughtfully, "but I don't know about my record in a higher tribunal. I wonder how many of the fellows serving life terms now ever had an angel for a mother, and a saint for a wife, clothes and friends and warm food from the hour they were born, always money to buy prestige and service and preference—! Ellen, if I had my life to live over again, do you know what I think it would be? According to the principle that until every other man had it, I didn't want it, and until every other child had it, I didn't want my son to have it—whatever it was, travel, clothes, education, toys, everything!"

"I suppose that's loving your neighbor as yourself," added Ellen's thoughtful voice.

"Well, you go to old George, and he and Mary Cutter will help you find the cases you're after—" Gibbs was beginning again. But she laid her hand lightly over his lips.

"Don't talk that way—not as if—!"

Her cheek was laid against his hand again. He put his free hand softly on her head. And even through her thick, dark hair Ellen felt the chill of his fingers.

[THE END]

Doll's House for Czar

When a young man of twenty-four, Peter the Great of Russia went to Holland. He was working at different jobs so as to be better fitted to become ruler of Russia. In Utrecht he saw a miniature doll's house, furnished down to the minutest detail. In the library were paintings two inches square. Cabinets were filled with thumb-high porcelains from Japan. Special carpets were manufactured for this house, and the linen was woven in Flanders.

Peter the Great took a great fancy to this tiny palace and offered any price for one like it. The builder, a retired merchant, would not accept money for his handiwork, but offered to make one as a gift to the young czar. The lilliputian mansion, completed after 25 years of labor, is now in the royal museum, Amsterdam, says Mentor Magazine.

"Loud" Fish

A new species of fish that is brilliantly illuminated and that can make a loud, shouting noise when chasing smaller fishes has been discovered in the waters of Monterey bay, California.

Lightning Photographed

Photography determines the distance of a lightning flash, and hence the dimensions of any of its features. Two cameras are mounted side by side and exposed at the same time, says Nature Magazine. Objects of known distance from the point of observation are photographed along with the lightning, and a comparison of the two pictures, plus a little mathematics, gives the distance of the lightning much more exactly than the old process of counting seconds between the flash and the thunder.

After a man gets off one witty remark he is expected to give a continuous performance.

Health and good looks
—the reward of internal cleanliness.

IF YOU do not keep clean internally your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks and insomnia, each of which saps your health and vitality.

Avoid Laxatives—say Doctors

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Without any joking the company are probably of the opinion that any town where a water tank containing 11 feet of water will burn down must be a hot town without any question. Some folks believe that the real cause of the fire was spontaneous combustion, Added to the loss of the tank, is the fact that Dr. Sterling, local dispenser of medical advice was for many years a thorn in the flesh of the big railroads, but finally the roads beat the Doctor after carrying the case all over the United States but considering the trouble this outpost of Big Business has experienced in Jerome, one can't blame them if they dig out.

Hillsdale County dairy [illegible]

[illegible] dairying, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The figure is based on data resulting from many carefully kept records on a considerable number of farms.

The average quantity of manure recovered for use on crop lands in the area studied was 7.4 tons per cow, and since the fertilizing value of a ton of manure is $2 60 the by product value of each cow is approximately twenty dollars. The application of this figure to the 17 thousand dairy cattle in this county brings the total added value to the fertility here to the almost unbelievgble figure given above.

In keeping with its better feeding program the Institute estimates that from 25 to 50 per cent greater profit from each ton of feed can be made by local farmers who milk cows through improved feeding methods alone. This was demonstrated it states, by the experiment recently concluded by the University of Minnosta. The school's dairy division about a year ago purchased four average cows with available records but without a scientific feeding ration and by merely placing them on a home grown ration suitable to their needs, increased each cow's production almost 40 per cent.

WHEELER SCOURGE OF CORRUPTION

Vice Presidential Candidate Drove Daugherty From Office.

By JOHN GUNN

Washington, D. C.—The dominant quality of Senator Burton Kendall Wheeler is his magnificent courage, blended with personal amiability and guided and directed by a brain of alert intelligence.

Outside of Montana, the public knows little of the story of Wheeler's 42 years of struggle and achievement.

Wheeler was born at Hudson, Mass., a small New England village, on February 27, 1882. His father was the village shoemaker. His mother traced her lineage back through three centuries of distinguished New England ancestry. Wheeler's forbears, in fact, were on American soil before "the Lowells who speak only to Cabots," and "the Cabots who speak only to God" had made Massachusetts the scene of their aristocratic and exclusive activities.

Young Wheeler spent no time admiring his family tree. He was ambitious and energetic, and early set out to earn his own way in the world. The youngest of ten children, he pieced out the meager family income by cultivating a strawberry patch and selling his produce at Hudson. He peddled pop corn and peanuts at baseball games, sold newspapers and managed to support himself by other odd jobs while he finished high school.

Goes West to Study.

He determined to go West to study for the law. He went to Michigan and entered the law school at Ann Arbor. He had less than $10 in his pocket when he enrolled for the school year and it was necessary for him to wait on students' tables and do stenographic work in order to pay his tuition and his living expenses.

Wheeler entered a law office at Butte, Mont., and after a few years his two-fisted fighting ability won him a big practice. In 1910 he entered politics as a candidate for the legislature and was elected. Thomas J. Walsh, then one of the leading lawyers of Montana, was a candidate for the United States senate at that session of the legislature.

Wheeler led the fight for Walsh. Through the tense days of that session he stood up manfully, giving blow for blow, and went down fighting when the copper interests finally triumphed. Later he helped in the campaign for the adoption of a constitutional amendment providing for the direct election of United States senators in Montana and had the satisfaction of seeing Walsh elected by a direct vote of the people in 1912.

In 1920 he won the Democratic nomination for governor. Every Republican and Democrat newspaper and most of the weeklies opposed him. Nevertheless, in the November election he ran 17,000 votes ahead of Governor Cox, the head of the Democratic ticket.

Chosen Senator by Progressives.

In 1922, the Progressives of Montana called upon him to become a candidate for the United States senate.

Early in the session, Wheeler prepared a resolution providing for an investigation of the Department of Justice. He received little encouragement from the members of his own party but the Progressive Republicans gave him their active support and a committee to conduct the inquiry was elected from the senate floor, on motion of Senator LaFollette.

The story of Wheeler's conduct of this case against corruption and malfeasance in the Department of Justice is already well known to the public. Single-handed, he carried on his fight, pursued every step of the way by spying agents detailed by Daugherty and Burns to "shadow" him and to "get something on him."

"I am a Democrat, but not a Wall street Democrat." In these words, voicing the sentiments of the progressives of his own party, Senator Burton K. Wheeler accepted indorsement as a candidate for vice president on the Independent Progressive ticket.

Republicans Try To Steal Credit For Lower Taxes

Washington, D. C., October.—Efforts on the part of Republicans to steal credit for the reduction of 25 per cent in income taxes payable this year—authorized in the Garner-Simmons (Democratic) law which President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon opposed—are illustrated in the letter broadcast by Galen Tait, Collector of the Revenue in Maryland. Here is what Tait wrote to one taxpayer who knew the facts and exposed this Republican propaganda:

"The Revenue Act of 1924, recently passed by Congress, following the proposal of Secretary Mellon for tax reduction, provides for a 25 per cent reduction of tax on incomes received by individuals during the calendar year 1923.

"Inasmuch as your 1924 tax was paid in full in advance, a check for the 25 per cent refund, or one-fourth of tax is enclosed herewith."

This letter bore the name of Tait himself. He is a Republican politician from Ohio and is not a native or a long resident of Maryland.

The fact is Secretary Mellon bitterly opposed the Garner-Simmons law under which these reductions and refunds were authorized and President Coolidge shared this opposition. The latter was only prevented from vetoing the bill by fear of the political consequences of taking that course on the eve of a preidential election.

Under the plan urged by Secretary Mellon and demanded by President Coolidge, the millionaires and billionaires would have been the principal beneficiaries of tax reduction. According to John Carson, a well-known Washington correspondent and authority on fiscal subjects, Secretary Mellon would have obtained a reduction of about $1,000,000 in his own income taxes under the scheme he advocated and wanted Congress to enact.

Addenda And Correction

A slight error occurs in the article "Resignation of Mr. Hughes' on the inside pages. Instead of the trusts being on trial we should have said the big life insurance companies, particularly the New York Life, appeared on the grill before Mr. Hughes and their inside workings exposed to the pitiless criticism of the thousands of policy holders. Merely a misconception of the subject, and the editor having no reference handy, got slightly mixed.

DeMolay Entertain

The judges E, C. Varnum. Mrs. Lewis Hergert and Mrs. Ernest Thornton decided in favor of the affirmative Light refreshments were served.

Your Income Tax

If you are single and support in your home one or more persons closely related to you and over whom you exercise family control you are the head of a family and entitled under the revenue act of 1924 to the same personal exemption allowed a married person, $2500. In addition, a taxpayer is entitled to a credit of $400 for each person dependent upon him for chief support if such person is either under 18 years of age or incapable of self support because mentally or physically defective. Such dependent need not be a member of the taxpayers household. For example, an unmarried son who supports in his home an aged mother is entitled to an exemption of $2,500 plus the $400 credit for a dependent, a total of $2,900. If from choice the mother lived in another city, the son, although her chief support, would be entitled only to the $1,000 exemption plus the $400 credit. The mother not living with him, he is not considered the head of the family.

An exemption as the head of a family can be claimed by only one member of a household.

The $400 credit does not apply to the wife or husband of a taxpayer, though one may be totally dependent upon the other.

What you GET here depends on what you GIVE here

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen; or by a test with your own cows.

Educational Changes

The time when it was possible to be generally well informed is past. An industrious man may know something of history and literature, which requires a knowledge of classical and modern languages. Or he may know some parts of mathematics or one or two sciences. But the ideal of an "all-round" education is out o' date; it has been destroyed by the progress of knowledge.—Betrand Russell in the Century Magazine.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senate Rejects Government Ownership for Muscle Shoals Properties.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GOVERNMENT ownership of Muscle Shoals received its death blow in the senate when that body, as the committee of the whole, by a vote of 48 to 37, substituted the Underwood leasing bill for the Norris bill, which had been reported by the committee on agriculture as a substitute for the Henry Ford measure passed by the house. The Underwood measure, however, may not be finally passed by the senate. Instead, the Jones substitute is quite likely to be successful. This provides for the appointment of a commission of three, comprised of the secretary of war, the secretary of agriculture and one other to be selected by the President, to study the entire problem and report a solution to congress next winter. Most of the government ownership advocates are said to prefer this to the Underwood bill, under which the President is authorized to lease the Muscle Shoals property at any time up to September 1, on terms similar to the Henry Ford offer, except that the lease is limited to fifty years. If no satisfactory lease can be made a government corporation will be created. The bill emphasizes production of fertilizer for agricultural purposes, and specifies the amount of air nitrogen which must be produced by a lessee.

WITH a margin of only one vote the senate refused to override President Coolidge's veto of the postal employees' pay raise bill. Fifty-five senators voted for the measure, but 29 stood firm in sustaining the veto and the prestige of the White House and of Senator Curtis, the new majority leader of the senate, was saved. This was done by the aid of Senator Dial, Democrat, who voted to sustain the veto, and of King, Owen and Shields, also Democrats, who were absent. Several who orginally favored the bill changed over and voted against it.

It was at once announced by the administration leaders that they would now push the Moses bill, which provides for wage increases for postal employees and for postal rate advances amounting to $60,000,000. But it was believed the chances to get this measure through in this session were small.

JOSEPH McKENNA, for 26 years an associate justice of the United States Supreme court, retired from that exalted position, and on the same day the President nominated Attorney General Harlan Fiske Stone to succeed him. As a mark of the affection in which Justice McKenna was held by his associates his resignation was made known with unusual ceremony. A large basket of roses was placed on the bench in front of him and Chief Justice Taft announced his retirement. Justice McKenna read a letter to his colleagues, and then, as he withdrew to the robing room, the court and the audience in the chamber arose and stood silent.

Until the President selects a new attorney general the place will be filled automatically by Solicitor General Beck. Several men were considered for the vacancy by Mr. Coolidge, and it was said he looked with especial favor on Charles Beecher Warren of Michigan, former ambassador to Japan and Mexico. This stirred up the entire Michigan delegation in congress, and also Governor Groesback of that state, who had himself been suggested for the place. Senator Couzens carried to the White House the information that the Michiganders much preferred Groesback to Warren and arranged to take the state's delegation to the executive mansion to back up his assertion. The opposition to Mr. Warren grows partly out of factional Republican politics in Michigan and partly out of personal misunderstandings between Mr. Warren and various Republican leaders in his own state.

Other possible choices for the attorney generalship were said to be Mr. Beck, Silas Strawn of Chicago, Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, Owen J. Roberts of Philadelphia and Chief Justice Arthur P. Rugg of the Massachusetts Supreme court.

WORKING rapidly and smoothly, the senate passed the appropriation bills for the Interior and Agricultural departments and the combined Treasury-Post-Office measure. Only slight changes were made in any of them. The house passed an emergency deficiency bill carrying $157,000,000 for immediate expenditure. Major provisions of the bill, in addition to the Inland Waterways corporation item, are $150,000,000, to be used in refunding internal revenue taxes illegally assessed and collected; $3,501,200 for continuing work on dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; $275,000 for eradicating reported epidemics of bubonic plague among rats at New Orleans and Oakland, Cal., and $150,000 for repairing the coast guard cutter Manning.

During the discussion of this measure it came out that the appropriations committee had turned down requests of the President for money to pay the expenses of the St. Lawrence and the agricultural commissions, and that Chairman Martin Madden had sharply questioned the legal right of the President to appoint commissions without the authorization of congress.

MORE than a million farmers in 18 states were represented by leaders of the co-operative marketing movement who gathered in Washington last week, and those leaders declared themselves opposed to any coddling by the government and emphatically against the proposal of the Capper-Williams bill to unite producers and speculators into one organization. The men who dominate the national council of farmers' co-operative marketing associations now ask, only that the government take up, in behalf of co-operation, the introduction of a senate resolution calling for an investigation of alleged unfair tactics by the American Tobacco company and the Imperial Tobacco company (British) against the Tobacco Growers' Co-operative association.

The Dearborn Independent has been printing a series of articles designed to show that the co-operative movement is a plan of an international group of Jews "to turn over to an organized international interest the entire agricultural industry of the republic." The magazine mentions the names of Julius Rosenwald, Otto Kahn, Bernard M. Baruch, Albert D. Lasker, Eugene Meyer, Jr., and Aaron Sapiro. The last named is counsel for several of the co-operative organizations, and he has taken steps toward bringing suit against Ford and others for $1,000,000 for alleged libel. He has mailed to Ford a formal demand for a retraction within thirty days, this being required by Michigan laws as a preliminary to a libel suit.

WIDESPREAD disregard of the eighteenth amendment and violations of the national and state prohibition laws led to the formation of the national citizens' committee of one thousand on law enforcement, which last week concluded its annual meeting in New York. It adopted resolutions for presentation to the President and the governors of the states, and a special committee carried these to Washington, where it was entertained by Mr. Coolidge at breakfast. One of the resolutions requested the President and the governors to urge all officials "of every rank and classification, appointive or elective, to join them by precept and personal example and, so far as they may by active participation in all administrative efforts, in maintaining among the citizens of our republic the high determination to obey and enforce the law of the land."

A second resolution "commends to the people of the United States, and particularly to their official representatives, the attitude of the President in his obedience to the provisions of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution in the hope that the example of the first citizen of our country may induce those who are now willfully violating the prohibitory statute to accept his leadership in conduct and indorse in practice the integrity of his fidelity to the supremacy of the law."

This same subject of dry law violation has aroused some of the reformers in congress, because the testimony in the divorce case of Representative Scott of Michigan has brought out the alleged fact that various congressmen are among the frequent offenders. Mr. Upshaw of Georgia intimates that an effort may be made to expel from the house those members who drink intoxicating liquors.

SENATOR LADD of North Dakota, one of the four LaFollette supporters who were read out of the Republican party by the senate caucus, found opportunity last week to denounce that action and to declare he would not submit to it. He said the same method would have meant the death of the Republican party in 1912. Thereupon Senator Edge said the Republicans would welcome Senator Ladd back into the party if the section of his address relative to the return of Roosevelt to the party was an indication of "your plans to march in line in the future."

On the Democratic side, Senator Dial recently made an address blaming Democratic members of congress for the party's defeat last November. For this he was hotly assailed by other Democratic senators, and he asked leave to withdraw his remarks, saying he had not intended to be offensive, seeking only a way to re-unify his party.

CHICAGO, the upper Mississippi valley and all cities on the Great Lakes are vitally interested in the decision of the United States Supreme court forbidding, after 60 days, the withdrawal of more than 4,167 cubic feet of water per second from Lake Michigan for the Chicago drainage canal. As at present constructed and operated, the Chicago drainage system requires two or three times this amount of water, and if the court's order stands a new program of sewage disposal will have to be undertaken at great expense. The suit was brought by the government years ago. The real complainants are the lake cities, which claim the lake level is being dangerously lowered, and the people of the Illinois and Mississippi river valleys, who say the water was contaminated. The Chicago congressmen are seeking temporary relief from the secretary of war and permanent relief from congress.

EARLY and amicable settlement of America's claim for payment of its occupational army costs and war damages from the Dawes plan proceeds was forecast by the talk in the allied financial conference which met in Paris. Col. James A. Logan, American unofficial observer, and Chancellor Winston Churchill had several friendly conversations, and Ambassadors Kellogg and Herrick took part in the negotiations. The British seemed ready to drop their objections to payment of America from the reparations receipts, and Colonel Logan made concessions as to the amounts of the annual payments asked. The matter of the interallied war debts also was taken up, unofficially, and it was reported that, while there would be no international debt conference, France would proceed at once to negotiate settlements with America and Great Britain through diplomatic channels.

BY MUZZLING the press and raiding the organizations of the opposition, Premier Mussolini succeeded in "clearing the situation" in Italy and the Fascisti are on top, safely for the present. What amounts to military law has been established, the prefects being given permission to take whatever steps they deem necessary for the safety and internal peace of the land. Parliament is in session again, but will consider only Mussolini's new electoral law and then disband, and thereafter parliamentary immunity from arrest will not operate. The opposition has not given up yet, but on all sides assurance is given that there will be no public disorders during the holy year, when many thousands of pilgrims are expected to visit Rome.

FOR the first time an American state has a woman governor, for Mrs. Nellie T. Ross has been inaugurated as chief executive of Wyoming. The ceremonies were severely simple, and Governor Ross announces that economy will be one of her guiding principles. On January 20 Mrs. Miriam Ferguson becomes governor of Texas. Already she has selected women for secretary of state and for a seat on the state Supreme court bench.

Increase in Demand for Artificial Silk

London.—The little shop girls of Ireland are responsible for a boom in the artificial silk trade that is one of the bright spots in the business life of these isles.

The manufacturers of a new process of weaving artificial silk materials, an industry started long before the war, are now banking fatted dividends because the girls in the shops and offices, and even schools, are no longer content to wear the cotton stockings and cotton blouses which they displayed before and throughout the war.

That attitude for style changing which in America could make and unmake flapper fashions overnight, moves slower in England, and a year or so ago the English girls found that much of their social standing was based upon silk stockings.

The manufacturers of the artificial silk then reopened their mills, closed by post-war dormancy, and have kept the factories working overtime producing stockings, blouses and other similar articles. The artificial silk trade has grown until now most of the long-established woolen and cotton spinning firms are producing artificial silk of some sort. Machinery for making artificial silk garments and novelties is being invented and marketed daily.

The industry has spread also to India, where artificial silk shawls, headdresses and cloths are being produced with even a more luxurious gloss and feathery softness than real silk.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

PROPOSED AUTO AND GAS TAX RECEIVES APPROVAL OF GOVERNOR.

Lansing—The State highway finance program for the next two years which Gov. Groesbeck will support has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Baxter, of Grand Rapids. The program provides for a 70 cents a hundredweight tax on passenger cars, 80 cents to $1.00 a hundred on trucks and a 2-cent a gallon gasoline tax. The weight tax would be given immediate effect to permit the issuance of 1925 licenses and the collection of funds for a construction program next summer. The gasoline tax would not take effect until Jan. 1, 1926.

The program is so drawn as to provide sufficient money for highway purposes, no matter what steps may be taken to block the enactment of a gasoline tax. The minimum requirement to maintain present highways is given as $13,760,000 a year, while a 70-cent a hundredweight on passenger cars plus an average of 90 cents a hundred on trucks would yield better than $20,000,000, according to estimates.

A two cents a gallon gasoline tax it is estimated would return $7,000,000 to $8,000,000 a year. The administration plan provides that if the people should vote a gasoline tax that the return from this source should be used to reduce the weight tax, the total receipts for highway purposes being held at approximately $20,000,000. The plan is the work of the administration officials and Senator Howard F. Baxter, of Grand Rapids.

Governor Delivers Message.

Governor Alex. J. Groesbeck, in his message delivered to the legislature last week, featured the proposed highways and conservation program. He recommended an auto weight or gasoline tax, or both, to raise revenues for road purposes. He also pointed out the necessity for stricter supervision of public utilities, finance corporations and building and loan associations and recommended to the legislature's attention the need for new buildings at many State institutions. The message was delivered before a joint meeting of the Senate and House in the House chamber.

He declared that there is no reason why automobile taxation in Michigan should become onerous and urged upon the assembly the enactment of weight tax rather than the present tax based on horsepower. He declared that many of the present trunk lines should be re-routed to straighten and shorten them and that the legislature should grant the additional authority.

Change in Judiciary Sought.

Bills have been introduced by Senators George M. Condon and Arthur E. Wood, of Detroit, which provides that in cities operating under the Recorders Court Act, there shall be one Recorder's court judge for each 100,000 of population, provided the voters approve of such a regulation at an election of Detroit Recorder's Court judges from seven to probably 10 or more.

Welsh Names Committee.

Lieutenant Governor George Welsh has announced a complete list of committee appointments to serve in the state senate. Senator Burney Brower of Jackson, was given the chairmanship of finance and appropriations committee, which is the equivalent of the ways and means committee in the house.

Reapportionment Bill Up.

Senator Arthur E. Wood, of Detroit, has introduced in the senate a bill providing for redistricting and reapportioning of the entire lower peninsula. The bill was referred to the apportionment committee. Wood's bill would allot one state senator for approximately every 120,000 population.

Wells Chosen Speaker.

Rep. Fred B. Wells, of Cassopolis, who has represented Cass County in the House for the past 10 years, was named the Republican candidate for speaker over Rep. George C. Watson, of Capac, by a caucus vote of 62 to 33. The House ratified the nomination.

Pierce Named House Clerk.

Charles Pierce of Lansing, was unanimously chosen clerk of the house. This is his tenth term and if he finishes, he will have served 20 years, a record in the state. A previous clerk in Michigan's early history served 18 years.

House May Offer All Pay Bills.

The suggestion from Speaker Fred B. Wells and other members of the House that legislative procedure would be quickened if all appropriation bills were introduced in the House as they are in the House of Congress has already met considerable opposition in the Senate and apparently will not be realized. Speaker Wells also proposes that all of the House appropriation bills be introduced by one member. In 1923, they were parcelled out and as a result several put in a tardy appearance in the House.

May Amend Worker's Law

Changes in the Workmen's Compensation Act to remedy its existing defects were recommended by the special commission appointed a year ago by Gov. Groesbeck when it filed it's report. The Workingmen's Compensation Act, provides for a State accident fund, through which employers may insure their workmen against injury. Employers have the option of insuring with private companies or of carrying their own insurance, or of carrying no insurance at all in which case they are liable for all damages.

Betty Blythe was preparing for one of her personal-appearance tours and as she wanted to make a good impression she studied her monologue every chance she got. Her opening line began: "My name is Betty Blythe."

While walking down Hollywood boulevard she was still studying, saying her lines over and over again with the result that she bumped into three young men.

Betty was so startled that she blurted out: "My name is Betty Blythe," at the top of her voice.

"Thanks," laughed one of the trio, "and while you're about it, what's your phone number?"—Los Angeles Times.

Get Special Fares For Farmers week

Visitors at the annual Farmers Week at the M. A. C. February 2 to 6 will have the benefit of reduced fares on all railroads in the state while traveling to and from East Lansing, according to announcement made here this week.

The special rates are expected to result in considerably increased attendance at the gathering, especially if road conditions make driving difficult. Visitors from distant points in the state depend on the railroads for transportation to the winter conference in almost all cases, and it is to them that the lowered ticket cost will mean the most.

Ronnd-trip tickets may be purchased from any point in the state (to Lansing and return) for one and one-half times the regular one way fare. Tickets should be purchased from the local ticket agents in advance.

Programs by Women's Clubs in the Middle West will be broadcast from radio Station WLS beginning January 26, according to reports. Girls On The Farm

One of the most serious problems facing the world is that raised in the question, How can we keep the girls on the farm? It is one of the hallmarks of civilization' that so many girls are forced into the big cities to seek their fortune. Probably no more daughters of the farm come to misfortune in the big cities than do the city girls or the girls from the small towns who work for a living. It can be set down as a sound proposition that working girls as a class, are more apt to make a success of life than another large class of girls having more social advantages but seeking the bright lights. It is a great social duty to make the home life on the farms more attractive to the girls. There should be more rural recreation centers under proper supervision. If the churches and fraternal orders could minister to the social needs of humanity, including the growing young people we would hear less of farm girls crowding to the cities. With good roads, cheaper motor cars, the rural mail and telephone, the phonograph, electricity and the radio, life is growing more attractive on the farms. Individual initiative, energy and ambition, the driving force which has built this nation, is the great agency that is today remaking farm life in America and making it pleasant for both girls and boys to stay on the farm.

The TRUANT SOUL

by VICTOR ROUSSEAU

COPYRIGHT BY W.G.CHAPMAN

WHO gets closer to life than a doctor? What other person comes more directly into daily contact with its romance, its hopes and defeats, its sordidness and its uplifting qualities? Who else has the drama of it all so constantly before his eyes?

This strange tale, eerie and mystifying in part, but filled with passionate interest and charm is the romance of a surgeon. Its heroine is a nurse. Its strongest scenes are in a sanitarium. One of its most effective climaxes takes place at an operating table. Edifying and thrilling; a story that engages the mind and the heart and does not permit interest to lapse for an instant. One of the most unusual and satisfactory of Victor Rousseau's many remarkable stories.

The Gas Tax Question

Some of the legislators up at Lansing want to soak a tax of 70c per hundred pounds on large passenger cars which seems quite unreasonable in view of the fact that the automobile owner now pays a heavy tax on everything he buys for the machine. The congressmen are determined the $4,000,000 to build highways in 1925 must be had somehow, and most of them are a little rabid about it. They reiterate the road building program must not under any circumstances be held up, and the men who use the roads have got to pay the shot

It seems as if a man who wants a tax of 70c per hundred placed on automobiles, must be stark mad, as everybody knows these big cars are not by any means the worst offenders. Go anywhere in Southern Michigan and you will see the monstrous 3, 4 and 5-ton trucks loaded beyond capacity, reminding you of the steam locomotive, roaring and spseding over the road bed at 25 miles per honr. If you doubt the destructive work of these Juggernauts, observe the roads from Battle Creek city to Camp Custer where in less than one month the bese gravel road was cut to flinders or go into our cities and find ruts of one to two inches cut in the hardest concrete with one year's use, and yet they want to saddle the blame on the heavy touring car. These big trucks are the culprits every time and if something is not done at once to tax them per wear, the road upkeep will be our heaviest item.

Resignation of Mr. Hughes

Charles Evans Hughes for twenty years at the helm of public life and more or less connected with the machinery of the United States government, has resigned for the purpose as he says, of enjoying a few years of domestic and quiet life before he is called from earthly home. In his going the American nation loses one of her most valued citizens and expounders of the Monroe Doctrine. Hughes' 20 years of public life have made him the most famous and highest honored in the world. Since entering the cabinet of the President, his duties have been onerous and burdensome, and none but the best can stand such strain.

Way back in the days when he was a struggling lawyer Mr. Hughes gave promise of a fruitful life. Politics came his way and called him, as they do many a worthy man. He became Governor of the great Empire state where it was often remarked his simple home life was of the highest type. His domestic relations have always been of the most ideal—and taken all together we believe Charles Evans Hughes represented the most ideal specimen of American citizenship.

As Governor of New York he inaugurated a large number of reforms and eliminated much that was objectionable. About this time and later the great octopus trusts became outlaws and investigations were started to find the real cause of high prices of the leading commodities such as oil, coal and manufactured articles, and Mr. Hughes became the principal inquisitor, in fact his scaihing denunciations of the blind workings of trusts to throttle the public, are a matter of real history.

The Coal trust, Standard Oil Co. and Meat Packers came in each for a share of the overhauling, and steps were taken to dissolve these combines, though the job was never completed. While not put out of commission it was admitted that a rather serious crimp was put into them by Mr. Hughes, If money alone could have downed a man Mr. Hughes would have been sent to the junk heap and forgotten, but the great electorate of this country has seen fit to raise to office presidents who recognized his ability. As Judge of the Supreme Court he figured in cases of world-wide import. When he was called to the cabinet of the president the country was palpitating in the aftermath of war's destruction, and to be Secretary of State at such a time was a terrfiic responsibility little realized by the American people. Standing next to the Commander-in-chief of the United States army and navy, Mr. Hughes resembled the rock of Gibraltar in the sense that he could neither be changed or moved. Firmness was always his long suit. When it became necessary to appoint a man big enough for the job they found him in Charles E. Hughes. Of him it can truly be said: "He is a man for the ages."

There is just one more fact we wish to impress upon our readers and that is the personality of the subject of this sketch. He has been variously quoted on the temperance question, but the fact remains he was one of the strongest advocates of anti-liquor except W. J. Bryan, ever in that high position. and though untold thousands in money were his for the taking, he positively refused to support the "wet" propaganda in public or private, thus by a noble example saving the day practically for hundreds of Anti-Saloon Leaguers throughout the country. All honor to the retiring secretary of state who has the courage of his convictions and is not afraid of the back-lash!

Gas, Weight Tax Bills Foremost As Session Opens

Senators and representatives assembling here today for the second week of the 53rd session of the State Legislature are chiefly concerned with the matter of highway finance. Some individual lawmakers will discuss their own pet projects, but general interest is being reserved for gas tax and weight tax discussion.

The two formal sessions held during the first week accomplished little more than the organization of both houses and the reception of the Governor's message. Considerable progress was made in the all-important task of getting acquainted.

The first significant development of the session was the election of Rep. Fred B. Wells of Cassopolis as Speaker of the House Wells was chosen at a caucus held on the night preceding the formal opening of the session. He was selected on the first ballot by a vote of 62 to 33 over Rep. George Watson of Capac who receivad the solid Wayne county vote and was regarded as the Administration's favorite.

With the speakership contest settled and other organization arrangements completed the Senate and House met in joint convention Thursday and received Governor Groesbeck's third biennial message The Governor devoted most of his attention to a discussion of highway financing problems and advocated a modified automobile weight tax as the chief source of revenue. He mentioned a gas tax very briefly but he did not endorse it. His address left the impression that in his opinion the weight tax should be passed first.

This appears to be principal point of difference between the Governor's program and that favored by leading members of the House and the Senate who insist that a gas tax must come first and then such modifications and reductions of the auto licenses as would bring in the balance of the required highway funds.

This week may see important developments along this line. Immediately after Governor Groesbeck had finished reading his message, Senator Howard F. Baxter of Grand Rapids introduced both a weight tax and a gas tax in the Senate. The weight tax would take immediate effect and would be on the basis of 70c per hundred for passenger cars with higher rates for trucks, graduated from 80c to $1.00 according to weight. If Senator Baxter's two cent gas tax bill were passed, it would take effect January 1, 1926, and the weight taxes provided in the companion weight tax bill would thereupon be reduced 20c per hundred.

K. T. Hospitalers Plan To Help Needy

Knights Templar Commanderies throughout the state of Michigan will observe for the first time, during the week of January 11, what will be known as "Hospitalers' Week." This is the outgrowth of the organization at the Saginaw conclave last summer of a concerted movement to study the social and economic needs in the different communities where Knight Templar Commanderies are located and to render such relief and provide such betterment as may be within the means of the commanderies to furnish.

Conferences will be held by the different Commanderies with other social and charitable organizations with a view of extending to such agencies the help of the Order of Knights Templar. Speakers on social problems and students in community betterment have been provided by some Commanderies for their programs, while others have summed up the needs and requirements of their respective localities for discussion and consideration. All activities will be reported to the Grand Commandery of Michigan, which has appointed a special Hospitalers' Committee to superintend and direct the work.

HEAD OF SCHOOLS SAYS BILL IS BAD

J. L. ANDERSON, TRENTON SUPERINTENDENT, CONDEMNS PROPOSED AMENDMENT

WILL WORK AGAINST IT

Measure Is Unnecessary, Expensive and Religious Intolerance, He Declares

(By J. L. ANDERSON,)
(Superintendent of Schools,)
(Trenton, Michigan)

That education is a state matter needs no apology; it does, however, require an explanation. Fundamentally, the state has unquestioned right to insure itself against the necessity of supporting any great number of its citizens. The state believes that the best insurance against such support is education. Therefore, education is primarily a state affair.

But the question here arises as to how far the state may go in attaining its end and the logical limit seems to to be the point where the state is sure that all of its children are receiving the same quality of education. Beyond this point the state may not go in matters of education without violating the Constitution of the United States and abridging the rights of the individual.

In Michigan, the state has insured itself that all children will receive equal quality of education in so far as it can do so under the present system of taxation and land values.

To be more explicit, first, the state of Michigan orders that all teachers in private and church schools shall have the same training as public school teachers. Sisters of the Roman Catholic church may be seen in numbers at state normal colleges and attending teachers' institutes and conventions.

Second, the state orders the same subjects be taught in private and church school as in public schools.

Third, supervision of private and church schools is placed in the hands of the State Department of Public Instruction, and while, to be sure, the state does not directly supervise the public schools, the fact is that private and church schools are receiving as much supervision today from the state department as the public schools.

The state of Michigan has provided, by a law enacted about four years ago, that the children in the private and church schools shall be under qualified teachers, shall pursue the same studies and be under the same supervision. The state, then, has insured itself against having to support its citizens because of lack of education and in so doing has reached the limit to which it may go in regulation of education. Any further rights in the matter are strictly parental.

The anti-parochial school amendment is unconstitutional and an abridgment of individual liberty.

If this amendment were to be enacted it would cost the taxpayers of the state millions of dollars additional to educate the children now being educated in private and church schools without expense to the state. Before one votes for this amendment, he should decide that he is ready to pay his share of the cost

If this amendment passes, many school systems of the state, already over-crowded, would be completely swamped. Half-day sessions in all grades would become universal as would also the use of basements and discarded school buildings. School housing conditions in many communities, which are just now reaching a point of adequacy, would be set back twenty-five years. Do the parents of either public or private school children want such a condition?

There would not be enough qualified teachers to instruct the additional pupils. High standards of preparation of teachers, laboriously built up, would fall. Children would receive inferior instruction.

Teachers' salaries would be lower, and high-class men and women would become fewer. Again the quality of instruction would be lower. To pay for the additional number of teachers required under this law would bring either salary reductions or increased tax rate or both; in any event the children would suffer by the inferior quality of the teaching that would result.

It is evident to those who have given the matter thought that this amendment is directed against one particular religious sect. Such indirect method of attack is bigotry of the worst kind. Why should any individual or group of individuals attempt to dictate how their friends or neighbors should worship? At this time, when we are continually hearing of religious strife and jealousies, it would be well for all thinking people to unite in an effort to offset the bigotry of the unthinking and uneducated. The time has come for us to reassert the principles of the founders of our country that "this nation of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from this earth," and that the world may still look upon these United States of America as "the land of the free and the home of the brave."

I am opposed to this amendment and intend to use my influence and vote against it.

PHANTOM CROOK FINALLY TAKE

State Police Follow Alleged Crimina For Years to Solve Mystery Of Killing

A man hunt that reads like a page from Gaboriou ended when Inspector Fred Hessler of the Michigan State Police leaped on his man in a Chicago Y. M. C. A. and after a brief struggle snapped the handcuffs on his wrists and proved to the world that there was such a man as Harry Wade Hill, hi-jacker, bootlegger, suspected bank robber and accused of murder.

For nearly four years Hill has been known as the "phantom bandit." In fact a number of police officials have firmly believed that there was no such man—that he was the creature of the imagination of Leo Sauerman and created only for the purpose of freeing Sauerman from the life imprisonment he is now serving for murder.

It was in January, 1921, that four men rapped at the door of the farm house of Alex Dombrowski in the down river district of Detroit, representing themselves as federal officers and demanding the right to search his premises. Suspecting that the men were hi-jackers, rather than federal officers, Dombrowski demanded to see their search warrant. A quarrel followed and during the quarrel Dombrowski was shot and killed.

Three men were arrested for the crime, Leo Sauerman, Homer Noel and Harry Brown. At the trial of Saureman he was positively identified by Mrs. Dombrowski and a young son of the murdered man as the man who fired the fatal shot and he convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment in Jackson prison. N and Brown were convicted of co plicity in the attempted robbery a the murder and given from 15 to 2 years in Jackson.

Sauerman stoutly insisted on his innocence of the murder although admitting that he was one of the gang. The shot, he declared, was fired by Harry Hill, and he told officers that there was a marked resemblance between him and Hill which caused his identification by widow and son of the murdered man

Inspector Hessler and State Detective Ferguson finally traced Hill to Chicago from Battle Creek and Marshall, where he had been, and established a watch there. Hill was receiving mail from some of his women friends at a Chicago Y. M. C. A. and when he went there Hessler and Ferguson nabbed him.

To the officers Hill admitted he had been guilty of bootlegging and that after he had been made the victim of hi-jackers he turned to that pursuit himself. He denied all knowledge of the Dombrowski killing, however, claiming that while he knew Dombrowski he did not know anything about the killing until some months after it had happened and then learned of it through an old paper he picked up in Battle Creek.

BANK ROBBERS ARE AFRAID OF STATE

Michigan is getting the name of a hard state for bank robbers to operate in. While the desperadoes have been successful in escaping after robberies in the larger cities in a number of instances, the robbing of a bank in a smaller town has almost invariably been followed by pussuit and arrest of the criminals.

One of the most notable cases during the past year ended in the arrest of a gang accused of robbing banks at Springport and Gregory. Three of the alleged bandits were identified by persons who were in the Springport bank when the robbery occurred. In this case the robbers made a clean getaway but were later rounded up by state police.

A clue was turned up in Detroit by state police there which resulted in a raid being made at Battle Creek by state police and local authorities in which the suspects were taken. This was possible because of the co-operation between various units of the state police and local officers.

SPECIAL PATROL ASKED

Commissioner Harry H. Jackson of the Department of Public Safety of Michigan has asked the state legislature to appropriate funds for a highway patrol in the resort and fruit-growing sections during the summer and fall seasons. These troopers are not only needed to check violation of the motor vehicle laws but also to protect orchards and do general police work. Presence of a courteous body of officers on the highways, who will aid motorists, is expected to encourage tourist travel.

INDENTIFY FUGITIVES

The identification bureau of the Michigan Department of Public Safety now makes an average of nearly 200 identifications each month cently four fugitives from prisons were arrested in one Iowa and identified through prints sent out from the bu Lansing.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Big Gains In America Result From Prohibition

In the "Camp Fire" section of the magazine, Adventure, of December 30, two pages are devoted to an open letter addressed to the editor, an opponent of prohibition, by Raymond S. Spear, an experienced newspaper man, setting forth the result of a survey he made to discover the actual results of prohibition. We quote at length from his interesting and convincing letter:

"You know I've traveled a good many miles before and since prohibition and one of my chief interests in life is facts. I wonder, sometimes, if my curiosity ever will be satiated? I became a prohibitionist when I saw good fellows, brilliant men, friends and acquaintances, fellow workers, go down from trials of highest promise to drunkard graves. None of my family drank. The last thing I would do would be to interfere with the other fellows' good times, happiness or desires. Least of all would I stand in the way of any man seeing his right to do it.

I lived in a booze town for fifteen years, until a year ago. We had sixty seven saloons for 12,000 people. The city spent some $600,000 cash for liquor, and I think wets and drys generally agreed liquor cost us about $2,000,000 annually. $600,000 at ante-prohibition prices. That means five times as much liquor, bulk, as would now be available at the same price speaking from a conservative view point. There were perhaps 4,000 drinkers, all told. Now, there are not 1,000.

Prohibition came because liquor was devastating the forces working on arms, ammunition and foodstuffs. It was a war measure, because liquor was utterly traitorous sapping the national strength. I have, myself, seen countless threshing machine crews, in the great wheat belt, Minnesota westward into the western Dakotas, ranging from saloon to saloon, while the wheat-fields called them to work. Half their labor hours were spent on drunks. The same ratio prevailed in some of our booze town industries—whole departments, with three of six work days "off" for liquor.

I'M STATING FACTS

I'm not arguing for prohibition. I'm stating facts, as they were before prohibition came.

Now there was a short period when there were almost no booze joints in that home town of mine. Then followed a blind tiger condition. I investigated this. I found twelve. Three were "wide open," I had worked for prohibition to help friends who had the liquor habit. When one of these, who had, to save himself, worked for prohibition, headed under, via bootleg, I reared.

This city voted two to one for booze in a campaign in which some sixty cities and communities in New York state had a local option campaign. We drys won thirty cities. I fought a hopeless fight, with a foolishly ignorant bunch of drys—stay-at-home political patriots. But our town didn't send any help, for the wets, in other towns. The towns where the drys had a chance went largely dry.

In this wet town, with public sentiment against law enforcement I demanded law enforcement, and got it as regards several of the blind tigers. When anyone tells me the United States Constitution and American laws can't be enforced, I know better. I've not only been a public officer, but I enforced even game laws in a land where they said it couldn't be done I've seen timber thieves prosecuted raiding on public property stopped when people said I was a fool for thinking it could be done. I've seen crooked politicians sent to jail when it was said it couldn't be done.

I was a reporter in New York City, 1896-1900. Since 1900 I have traveled from ocean to ocean, from Canada into Mexico; before and after prohibition, from New York City into the moonshine country of Blue Ridge, Cumberlands, Ozarks; from the big illicit brewery in Kingston, Ontario, Canada, to the wide open towns of southwestern Arkansas and to Mexicali. I know where the wets are in ascendancy. I've seen them. I know some of them personally.

AMERICA'S TOUGHEST CITY

There is not a wet in my acquaintance who is drinking as much as 25 percent liquor now, as right down to the war. I can take you in to any of the wettest places you ever saw in the United States, and you can't show me a dozen communities in the United States where there is even 20 percent as much liquor drunk, now in bulk, as formerly.

You know. I have been through thousands of miles of country. I've been a police court, a city court, a hospital, a police station reporter in New York City aud up state. You can't show me a single block in the United States equal to any block like that in 1898 containing Billy McGurk's Suicide Hall on the Bowery. Not in New Orleans, nor St. Louis, nor Memphis—especially Memphis, on its record, one of the toughest cities in the world. When I was in Memphis in 1903-4, conditions there were simply indescribable. Last autumn I came through there. I was amazed Stills a-plenty out on the bottoms. The drinkers, some of them, found liquor. But the old stench, the old foul conditions are there no longer. Prohibition! Memphis isn't drinking 10 percent as much liquor now as formerly. And this though the only place in the United States where you can find straight corn liquor, white mule, now is down the Mississippi—where it's cheaper to make wood alcohol, lyeball, redistillates and the other stuffs. The Cumberland Mountain (Appalachian system) liquors are now mostly adulterated. One railroad town in Tennessee had three stills on adjacent hills. Before prohibition there were a dozen illicit and a regular "legal" traffic amounting to hnndreds of times as much liquor.

Farm Bureau Legislation

We are in receipt of a long list of appointees among the state representatives at Lansing to the different committees which function in the house. This comes from the State Farm Bureau but we are of the opinion it is useless junk to our readers the most of whom don't care one iota who the men are on these committees as long as they produce the goods. Therefore we have omitted publishing these men's names. Suffice to say there is a lot of important work to be done in the line of road finance and we hope the bunch will get busy at once and grind out something worthy of mention. It costs this state an enormous sum of money to send its representatives to Lansing and keep the Capitol running, and to go there as a playspell would seem little short of a felony. At one time we visited the Senate chamber at Lansing and candidly we must say it reminded us in a measure of the old time "District Skule" in the sense it was presided over by a demagogue, the members had to ask permission to leave the room and sad to relate about as many mischievous pranks were in evidence as the average aggregation of small boys would put up. Possibly we didn't see the real busy day. If the United States Congress at Washington is conducted along the same lines government must be a farce from beginning to end.

The Village Council has decided to enforce that old-time ordinance relative to every property holder shoveling the snow from his walk, or take the consequences.

Burridge For Highway Commissioner

There is considerable commotion in the department of highways over the candidacy of a new highway commissioner, and Frank Rogers former highway commissioner is a little worried over the outcome but in our opinion he hardly need be. We don't believe with the record of Mr. Rogers behind that the electorate will want any changes. The vast amount of roads built the last two years ought to satisfy the most critical as to quantity and possibly quality but it might be possible to construct roads on a more economical basis. That is likely as not up to others as well as the Highway Commissioner. We received a long drawn out circular from the Burridge interests giving the pedigree in full of the Burridge family which don't interest us in the least. It makes precious little difference whether a man's ancestors fought in the Revolution or whether they came over in the Mayflower these days, because there are men and men, and a lot of us hate to look too far back into our family lineage lest we find a horse thief or a thug on the family tree. It is possible this man Burridge is a good fellow and he wants the office which is a start anyhow, but at the same time being human we don't presume he would turn down every flattery which might be handed him in the shape of currency of the United States by conscienceless contractors and and we guess this goes with the office, at least at times we have seen deals pulled off which should not have been, and miles of roads accepted by Michigan as par excellence.

We much doubt that a change in the highway commissioner's office at present would be any benefit, as Mr. Rogers has shown marks of real ability in contracting for new construction, and we believe there is a lot of skill developed in this line by practice. Service in the World war is a real credit but after all it has been used to cloak a good many failures in this political deal.

Soils Association Meets at Farm Week

The maintenance of soil fertility on Michigan farms and the lowering of the cost of crop production by proper methods of soil management will be two major problems discussed by the Michigan Soils Association, in annual meeting at M. A. C. during the Farmers Week Feb. 2 to 6.

While the meetings of the association are to be held on Tuesday and Wednesday mornings of Farmers Week, a special soil testing demonstration will be put on every morning of the week. Farmers who wish to have their soil tested for lime requirement can bring in samples for the soil test "clinic." They are urged by the college soils men to take the samples several days in advance, so that they may dry out; and to take two samples—one of the surface soil to a depth of about seven inches and one of the soil at a depth of two or three feet.

Chicago radio stations have 4,500,000 regular listeners within a radius of 250 miles of the city, so investigation shows. The survey included personal interviews with over 2,000 persons in 32 cities with in this radius and mail questionairres answered by 4,000 others in 90 places. Of the estimated 14 million people living within 250 miles of Chicago, approximately 33 per cent own radios or hear Chicago stations on neighbors' sets. All but six per cent of the persons approached in the survey reported hearing Chicago stations at some time and fully 82 per cent had heard WLS. Some hear Chicago at their places of business, others on roomers equipment while others hear programs at Clubs, Farm Bureau meetings, business houses high schools, churches, hotel lobbies, news stands, candy kitchens garages and radio dealers show rooms. Creameries, grain elevators and live stock marketing organizations were also discovered to be making use of radio market reports regularly.

Instrumental music is the most popular and is closely followed by vocal music, with a decided preferance for male voices. Farm and home programs also rank high while radio plays, readings and speeches are favored in the order named. Of the special WLS features, Lullaby time, noonday and Saturday night programs were commented on in the order given.

"BOB" IS LABOR FARMER FRIEND

By HON. JOHN M. NELSON
Member of Congress From Third District in Wisconsin.

In the present campaign all candidates for President claim to be friends of the farmer; but LaFollette alone can point to a record which shows that he is a friend not merely in campaign time but at all other times.

For 40 years LaFollette has been fighting to secure a square deal for the farmers. Born and raised on a farm, he understands farm problems.

As a young man he fought in the house of representatives for legislation to prevent the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter. As governor of Wisconsin he built up its dairy and food department and its agricultural college, both of which have been important factors in making Wisconsin the leading dairy state in the Union.

In the United States senate LaFollette has ever demanded the vigorous enforcement of the anti-trust laws against all who manipulate prices to rob the farmers and other producers. He has, also, been the leading advocate of a railroad policy which will insure rates based upon the actual cost of the service, and sought to prevent the deflation of the farmers, by amendments to the federal reserve act to eliminate Wall street control.

Fights for Farm Legislation.

LaFollette led the fight against the adjournment of the last congress without passing legislation for agricultural relief. LaFollette, alone of all Presidential candidates, has a program which will really help the farmers. This program calls for the creation of a government marketing corporation, the repeal of the Esch-Cummins act, the reduction of freight rates, the reconstruction of the federal reserve and farm loan systems, the regulation of the meat packing industry, the prohibition of gambling in agricultural products, the drastic reduction of duties on the products which the farmers must buy, protection and aid to agricultural co-operatives and, above all, breaking the control of monopoly over the economic life of the people.

LaFollette's Labor Record.

LaFollette has been the author of more legislation in the interests of wage-earners than any living American and has never cast a vote against labor.

As governor, 20 years ago, he gave Wisconsin its first effective child labor and compulsory school attendance laws, as well as its first laws for the safety of railroad employees, and its first modification of the harsh common law rules relating to employer's liability for accidents.

As senator, LaFollette introduced and secured the passage of the seamen's act, the law limiting the hours of labor on continuous duty of railroad employees and the eight-hour law for women employees in the District of Columbia. He was, also, the author of the first bills for a federal employers' liability law.

As long ago as 1908 LaFollette took a definite stand against the use of injunctions in labor disputes, and his platform is the only one which indorses labor's position upon this important amendment to curb the power of the courts to set the will of the people at naught by declaring laws unconstitutional.

As governor, more than twenty years ago, he gave Wisconsin its first women members on the boards controlling the educational, charitable and reformatory institutions and its first woman factory inspector. He publicly advocated women's suffrage long before either of the old parties indorsed this great reform.

Gave Child Labor Law.

LaFollette also gave Wisconsin its first effective child labor and compulsory school attendance laws; and he has worked and voted for every measure for the protection of children and in the interests of labor generally which has come before congress in the 19 years of his service in the senate.

LaFollette has ever stood for clean government. He started the Teapot Dome investigation and led the fight on both Lorimer and Newberry. His own record, both public and private, is clean as a hound's tooth.

Vote is by States.

As each state, no matter how large its population and its representation in the house, has only one vote, it is obvious that those states having a majority of representatives of one political faith will cast the vote of that state for their party nominee. As there are 48 states, and a majority of all of them is necessary to the selection of a President, a successful aspirant must have the votes of at least 25 states.

It should be emphasized that it is the present house of representatives and the present senate that vote for President and vice president in the event of the election being thrown into the congress. New congressmen and senators elected this fall will have nothing whatever to do with it.

The present house of representatives is so made up that there is little likelihood it can make a choice. Democrats make up a majority of the one big reason why

"U.S." gives longer wear

FIVE times its length! It takes real rubber to stretch like that.

But that's what a strip of rubber cut from a "U.S." Walrus or Boot will do.

No higher quality rubber has ever been put into a rubber overshoe or boot—and that's one of the big reasons why the "U.S." brand gives longer wear.

Layer on layer of tough fabric reinforcements are anchored in this live rubber. They give rugged strength to stand the hardest knocks and strains.

Because of these important facts farmers in every section of the country are finding that "U.S." means longer wear and better service.

It will pay you to ask for "U.S." and get the longest wear your money can buy.

Other "U. S." Rubber Footwear

You'll find every kind of rubber footwear in the big "U.S." line. In addition to the "U.S." Walrus and "U.S." Boots—there's the "U.S." Lace Bootee, an all-rubber workshoe—and "U.S." Rubbers and Arctics for every member of the family. Look for the "U.S." Trade-mark whenever you buy.

Made Work in Kitchen Easier and Quicker

Have you heard how happy Mrs. Smith is? Her experience is typical of others, according to Mrs. Marion C. Bell, specialist in home management at the State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick. Mrs. Smith says that no one ever called her attention to the height of her sink and her work table until the local home management leader spent a morning with her in her home. Then, to her surprise, she discovered she was leaning over her sink and work table in a very uncomfortable position and had been doing so for the ten years of her married life, says the New York Evening Telegram and Mail.

Instead of saying, "I'll change that some day," she went to work at once. By means of good ball-bearing rollers purchased for 40 cents the table was raised and thereby made not only a comfortable work center but a more useful one, as it can now easily be moved close to the stove, window, dining room door, or sink, as needed. She says it has already saved her many steps and much fatigue and that her next improvement will be the raising of the kitchen sink.

Internal cleanliness protects against disease

IN CONSTIPATION, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

DOCTOR AND NURSE

Now Joan could see his face, and, to her astonishment, it did not bear the expression of the smirking bully whom she had seen that morning, nor yet of the man who had addressed another man in such terms as one might use to a slave. It was not an unkindly face. And it was unmistakably that of a sick man.

For a moment she remembered the stories told of his behavior in the operating theater, of the gentleness that seemed to transform the man, as if he possessed a dual personality.

"I am Miss Wentworth," she explained. "I came to ask if you won't reconsider your decision to suspend me. I always wanted to be a nurse. Doctor Lancaster, apart from my own interests, I want to graduate to be able to help others. Won't you give me another opportunity?"

Here are hero and heroine. The reader who wants mystery, plot, action and a real love story can get it here in "The Truant Soul." Is it a story of dual personality or of an impostor and his victim? Is the woman with the maternal instinct the best wife as well as the best nurse? Can a victim of the morphine habit be permanently cured? These are questions the reader asks himself as he reads.

The author is Victor Rousseau, whose many stories of American life have given him a large public.

"I let him see I wouldn't stand for any language like that, and I reckon he understood, even if I didn't have to say much," remarked the dark-haired girl to Joan Wentworth. "It doesn't seem to have occurred to Doctor Lancaster yet that a nurse is a human being under her uniform.

"If he'd treat us half as nicely as he treats some of his lady friends," she added, in a suggestive tone that changed into the accentuation of ordinary speech under Joan's discouraging look. "I've seen him driving them round town nights in his auto, and I've never seen the same one twice. I guess he takes it out on us when they've been mean to him."

Joan did not answer her. She was watching the head surgeon as he came into the operating theater. At his entrance the general buzz of conversation ceased, as if the outpouring of words had been cut off with a knife. The students on the benches settled themselves in their places and craned their heads forward intently. The two assistant surgeons, Ivers and MacPherson, assumed attitudes of constraint, for everybody was constrained in Lancaster's presence. The orderly, who had been peering through the crack of the swinging door into the anesthetic room, where the head nurse was holding the patient's wrist and watching the face beneath the mask intently, straightened himself and stood up in military fashion. Only the visiting doctors seemed at their ease as they advanced to shake hands with John Lancaster.

They had come from several neighboring cities, drawn by the news that Lancaster was to perform his famous operation of arterial excision, which was just then the subject of discussion in the medical press. Plenty of surgeons had tried to remove a section of one of the larger blood vessels, but only Lancaster had succeeded in bringing down the mortality to 15 per cent.

Lancaster was something of a mystery both to his colleagues and to the nursing staff. The Lancaster fund supported the Southern hospital, and John Lancaster was firmly established at the head of the institution. The board of guardians, which existed according to the terms laid down in his father's will, had apparently only an advisory capacity, and it was supple and plastic in Lancaster's hands. And John Lancaster was more feared and admired than any doctor in the country.

Feared by most for his tyranny, admired by a very few on account of his extraordinary skill, he seemed to have a dual personality. The man whose fast life was the scandal of the conservative little southern seaport, who was ostracized by the better families, whose infrequent appearances in the hospital were usually the occasion for injustice, storms and dismissals, changed in the operating theater into a man whose gentleness and humility and skill made him adored for the time by all who came into contact with him. But it was only rarely that a case occurred that required his attention.

On such occasions his manner was in itself remarkable. He would slip stealthily into his private room, dress there, and emerge masked like a mummy to perform his miracle almost in silence, and afterward to make his escape in a way suggestive of his having performed some shameful action.

So much Joan Wentworth had heard. Naturally she watched his entrance on this, her first day of surgical work, with absorbed interest. But Lancaster came in unmasked, and Joan could discern nothing humble or secretive in the self-satisfied face or the brisk manner in which he greeted the visiting surgeons.

He looked a man of seven or eight and thirty, and he bore his years heavily. The eyes were lined and a little sunken; the features, which Joan had seen only a few times during her eighteen months of work at the hospital, exercised, as they had always done, a rather repellent effect upon the girl. The face was eminently cruel and hard. Nevertheless the man obviously dominated the assembly.

He dominated her. She was much more afraid of some nervous lapse in Lancaster's presence than of seeing the use of the knife. The hissing of the steam tank, the nervous movements of the spectators upon the benches, whose heads seemed to swing with a uniform and rhythmical motion, the deepening sense of constraint, acted upon her with a sort of hypnotic effect not lessened by Lancaster's decisive manner.

She pulled the tray of instruments out of the boiling water and set it down upon the table by the side of the bichloride solution. Lancaster, who had been pulling on his rubber gloves, came to her side and plunged both hands into the antiseptic fluid. There was a look of self-conscious satisfaction upon his face, and Joan thought that every gesture and each movement was designed to impress the visitors. Presently she became sure of it. The man was acting. A feeling of disgust came over her.

Lancaster cast a quick glance at Joan.

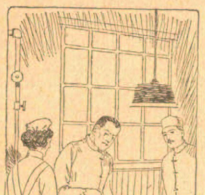
"New nurse?" he asked.

"My first morning of surgical work, Doctor Lancaster," she answered.

He grunted in a contemptuous sort of way. Joan flushed to the hair. He turned to the other girl.

"You there!" he shouted. "Look alive with those sponges!" And he cast a quick glance toward the visitors, as if to see whether they appreciated his harshness.

A look of chagrin came over the dark-haired girl's face, but she ran to obey and dropped the wet sponges into the bichloride with shaking fingers. At the same moment the swing door opened and the stretcher with the patient appeared, wheeled by the orderly. Behind it walked the head nurse, still maintaining her crouching attitude as she moved. The stretcher stopped inside the theater, and the head nurse and orderly lifted the man who lay upon it on the glass table.



The Struggle Ceased; the Man Sighed Deeply and His Limbs Relaxed.

He mumbled and tried to raise himself. The nurse put her hands about his shoulders, pressing them down, while the orderly held the body, protesting against the indignity about to be offered to it, to which it had emphatically not consented, whatever arrangement had been decreed by the brain. Lancaster's harsh voice boomed through the theater: "That's no way to bring a patient here, Miss Symons! Deep anesthesia!"

The head nurse lifted her face for an instant. "There's a history of nephritis, Doctor Lancaster," she said. "The pulse is 150, and Doctor MacPherson said—"

"Who's running this business?" shouted Lancaster, striding toward her; and Joan was sure that he looked out of the corner of his eye toward the visitors.

He snatched the green ether bottle out of the nurse's hand and poured a quantity of the fluid upon the mask. The struggle ceased, the man sighed deeply, and his limbs relaxed. The nauseating stench of the ether fumes made Joan's head reel. It seemed to fill the theater. Miss Symons, flushing, but displaying no resentment, took the bottle from Lancaster's hand and resumed her position, holding the patient's wrist and peering into his face, the green bottle upraised.

The girl who was in charge of the sponges whispered bitterly to her:

"He doesn't know how to treat a woman—not a lady. He isn't our kind. My! he must have been on a terrible racket last night! He can't keep up that gait much longer unless he gives up his work here."

Joan ignored her; she had concentrated all her attention upon Lancaster's probable demands; she was resolved not to be found wanting. It was said that Lancaster was absolutely merciless and had ruined many a girl's career by refusing to allow her to complete her graduating course. He was tyrannical, overlooked nothing, and never appreciated good work. Rumor went that when a certain nurse had once handed him benzine instead of alcohol he had taken her by the shoulders and run her bodily out of the hospital, forbidding her to show her face there again.

"He can't last long if he leads that sort of life," the dark-haired girl repeated. "You'd think he'd be old enough to have learned how to pretend to be a gentleman even if he isn't one."

Joan shook her off mentally as one chases away a persistent fly. For the tenth time she counted the instruments in the tray. Lancaster picked up a scalpel, and MacPherson and Ivers took up their positions, one on either side of him. The operation was beginning.

The visiting surgeons watched with an occasional whispered remark. The assistants already were snapping the little forceps upon the ends of the divided arteries. Lancaster issued his commands from time to time, without looking back:

"Sponges!"

"One—two," whispered the dark-haired girl. "Three—four—five—"

"Bistoury. Scissors. Dilator. Number four Simms."

Joan never faltered. She felt easier in her mind, her quick hands found the instruments in the tray the moment Lancaster demanded them. Meanwhile the dark-haired girl never ceased counting the sponges:

"Six—seven—eight—nine—"

Suddenly Lancaster stopped, wheeled and turned fiercely upon her. "For God's sake, stop that chatter!" he cried.

The girl let a sponge fall, snatched it up, and shot an apprehensive glance at him. Joan saw that she was losing her nerve in spite of her brave talk of a few minutes before. It was the critical time of a very dangerous and difficult process. She tried to pull herself together.

Yet, without looking up, she realized that a sense of general apprehension had stolen through the operating theater. The nurse at the head of the table, looking like a veiled Vestal, had not shifted her position since the beginning of the operation, except that from time to time her hand shifted slightly as she let one or two drops of ether fall upon the mask. MacPherson and Ivers stirred busily, their heads bent level with their chief's as they moved to and fro at their work. The patient began to mutter. Then a hand, upraised in weak protest, struck a clamp from Ivers' fingers. It rattled upon the floor.

"Keep him quiet, Miss Symons, confound you!" shouted Lancaster.

"Doctor Lancaster, the pulse—" she began. But, after a quick glance at the head surgeon, she shrugged her shoulders, tilted the bottle, and deliberately poured out nearly all the ether remaining in it. The renewed stench of the anesthetic filled the room. Joan saw the benches swing, the craning faces seemed to become multiplied; Lancaster and the two assistants, the visiting surgeons were tiny gnomes, an immense distance away, surrounding a tiny table on which a doll-like figure lay extended. She tried to bring them back into focus, but could not; and, what was worse, she felt that she had lost her nurse's sense of divining the surgeon's requirements before he gave expression to them.

The feeling of suspense was growing. Something was wrong, and although nothing had been said, even the students on the top row of benches farthest from the table were aware of it. The assistant doctors appeared as busy as ever, and yet they seemed at a loss, and once or twice looked up at Lancaster as if his technic was puzzling them. Joan saw two of the visiting surgeons exchange brief glances, one with inquiry, the other, answering, with uplifted eyebrows. Once Lancaster stopped; he resumed his work, stopped again, and stood staring at his work. Then he wheeled round upon Joan, the upper part of his body seeming to move upon a pivot, while his lower limbs remained stationary.

This is certainly a bad beginning for both hero and heroine—surgeon and nurse. What next?

Few Have, or Acquire, Good Thinking Habits

The average man works about eight hours a day, or is supposed to. The rest of the time is divided about equally, so the theory runs, between recreation and sleep.

Of the 16 waking hours how many are devoted to thinking? Psychologists tell us that a tenth is a liberal allowance, and, in actual practice, from that down. Only a little more than an hour and a half out of the twenty-four occupied in thinking!

Thinking is one of the most difficult and trying of occupations, says Collier's. Were this not so it is probable that we might spend more time at it. To prove this, try to concentrate your mind on the book you have just read; on the lecture you have recently listened to; on the important interview you have just had. Try to remember and recount to yourself, item by item, just as much as you can of the thing you read or listened to. It will tire you out. Unless you have trained yourself to the task your mind will wander—you will lose the thread.

Psychologists recommend the cultivation of thinking habits; they recommend less reading and more thinking about what you have read and heard and seen.

"As we do this well or ill," says John Stuart Mill, "so will we discharge well or ill the duties of our several callings."

Sowing One's "Wild Oats" Old English Expression

To "sow wild oats" means to commit youthful excesses or to spend one's time in dissipation. It usually implies subsequent reform. The expression originated, so far as known, among the country folks of England. Wild oats—a tall grass resembling the cultivated oat and probably its original progenitor—is a common weed in grain fields. It is natural that a weed so common and obnoxious should become the subject of a comparison among the country people. The expression dates back as far at least as the Sixteenth century. At first it merely meant sowing worthless seed or seed which would produce a worthless crop. The moral meaning was a natural transition from the literal significance. He who wastes the precious days of his youthful prime in dissipation is sowing seeds which will grow up into obnoxious weeds.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Some Value in Name

The name of a Wyandotte county (Kansas) man saved him tax money for many years. Albert H. Reid bought some property six years ago on time payments and received the deed this year. He asked the amount of taxes and was told that he did not owe anything, for the land was listed as M. E. Church, and church property is not taxed. Then Reid said: "M. E. Church is the name of the man I bought it from, and there isn't a church within six blocks of the property."

LOCATE IN VIRGINIA

Close to Big Markets

The price of land in Virginia is lower and the market price of crops is much higher. Virginia Lands valued at 40% less per acre produce crops worth 62% more than average for the United States, as shown by the statistical records. You can buy Virginia Land at 30% to 40% lower price per acre and receive practically 62% more net money for your crops. On account of Virginia being closer to big Eastern Markets better prices are secured, less freight. For instance, when the price of Corn in Virginia was $1.00 per bushel it was 59 cents to 68 cents per bushel in Western States, and the same is true in comparison of all crops. The average yield per acre in Virginia, with proper cultivation, is practically that of the Western States. In Virginia you can grow all Grains, Grass, Fruits, Poultry, Live Stock, Etc. Mild winters, healthy climate. Why not better your condition by locating in this favored section. Write for Hand Book, Maps, etc.

Out in Kansas there lives a young man named E. Haldeman Juluis who has the doubtful distinction of being the leading free thought publisher in America. Haldeman Julius has been called "The Henry Ford of Literature" and when one stops to consider that he has published and sold some sixty million books during the past five years, one may readily comprehend the magnitude of his business. While the Kansas publisher has probably caused some harm by his side swipes at Christianity, he has also accomplished much good by selling high class literature at tremendously low prices. For example, he has taken Shakespeare books which usually sell at from 20c to one dollar each and has put them out for a nickel apiece. Because of the activities of Haldeman Julius, it has been said of him that he has accomplished more educational work than a dozen universities combined and thus we have an example of a young fellow below the age of thirty who has done the impossible by revolutionizing the publishing business and by stirring the country from one end to the other which proves that Dr. Frank Crane was wrong when he said "You can't change the world so change yourself."

Michigan Steps Up In Dairy Standing

With more than thirty thousand cows under test in official cow testing associations during 1924, Michigan has suddenly taken rank as one of the leading dairy states of the nation in point of definite improvement work being done among its milk producers.

A census just completed by the dairy extension men of the M. A. C. shows that these 30,506 cows, to be exact, represent nearly four percent of all the cows in the state, the highest percentage of cows on official test shown by all the states of the country.

Genesee County, with 14.3 per cent of all its cows entered in the county's nine cow test associations also leads among all counties in the United States in respect to percentage of animals on test.

A striking illustration of what may be accomplished in cow test associations by way of increasing production is shown by production figures of the survey. While the average production of all Michigan cows is only 3,700 pounds of milk a year, the average production of the thirty thousand cow test association animals reaches the comparatively high figure of 7,201 pounds of milk and 277.3 pounds of butter fat a year.

Wisconsin alone leads Michigan in total number of cow test associations in operation, boasting 164 associations to Michigan's 105. Percentage of cows on test, however, gives Michigan first place. Another record which falls to state dairymen is that of greatest increase in association work during 1924, when 40 cow test associations were stated in the state.

Representative Williams Endorsed

Speaking on the floor of the Senate on January 12th, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, took occasion to strongly indurse the bill introduced by Congressman Arthur B. Williams, relative to the cooperative marketing of farm products. The Senator was discussing the need for relief of the agricultural interests of the country and said:

"The farmer is asking the aid and direction of the Government in the marketing of his products. In my opinion, owing to the widespread scope and scattered life of agriculture it is impossible for the farmers to organize and direct their affairs alone; it must be done, in my judgment, under the operating direction of the Government of the United States, mind you, I say under the directing agency and certain statutory directions and limitations as to middlemen."

"Mr. President, it is not my purpose today to discuss plans. What I desired to discuss particularly was the necessity for doing something. There are, however, three bills now pending, one particularly to which I have given attention, found in the Williams bill in the house of Representatives, which I think is a very carefully drafted measure. While I would not say that that measure is one that would not require some changes, I am satisfied that it does deal with a subject with which we have got to deal; and I am satisfied also that even if that bill does not meet the situation, it is up to Congress to find one that will do so."

The stinking scandal at Benton Harbor between the state authorities and the House of David has finally come to an end in an unexpected and mediocre way by the Judge on the case deciding in favor of whiskers. This explains why Purnell so suddenly came out of retirement—he probably has been told to come home and be a goodv goody. Michigan evidently does suffer with catarrh so badly she cannot sense the stench that emanates from Benton Harbor House of David, as this decision practically gives the Cult a clean bill of health.

Refreshments of sandwiches, cookies, doughnuts, apples and cocoa were served and all adjourned wishing that there wasn't any school next day so we could stay later." The sleigh with its jingling bells took the guests safely home.

Last week we received from Miss Olive Hall of SanDiego, California, a sample copy of the Daily San Diego Union, one of the mightiest dailies on the coast. It certainly a winner and we have not counted them but there must have been at least 30 pages of illustrations and reading matter. It gives a good idea of the booms in real estate which are taking place out there and the wonderful possibilities of sun-kissed orange groves and truck patches. and the beautiful land-locked harbor where ships of all nations ride at anchor. and United States gunboats keep constant vigil. This is only a short distance from old Mexico and it is related that the only way one would know where U. S. leaves off and Mexico begins is by a woven wire fence anchored far out in the Pacific and running over hill and dale until it meets the Rio Grande river. This is the National boundary line and frequently the "greasers" come over into God's country but their room is far better than their company to most Yankees. San Diego is of strategic importance as a naval depot and flying field and all kinds of subs and torpedo boats can be seen at all times in the harbor. Bathing and all outdoor sports are now in full swing.

IN MEMORIAM

The following lines were read in memory of Mrs. Lucille Iveson at the last meeting of the Hoxie Aid last week.

"The silver cord is loosed, and the golden bowl is broken at the fountain; and it is time that we have wept.

'Only a broken and emptied vessel; Broken that He might heal, emptied that He might fill—fill with the fullness, the richness of that life with Him, with all of its opportunities unbounded and untrampled, as full as the limitations of eternity, as great as the power of omnipotence.

We believe that our sister, though lost to mortal vision, has passed through the gate into the city splendid.

We can confer no greater honor upon her memory than to emulate the virtues which her life has taught us, and now faith breathes the prayer that in the great beyond, that spirit world of sunshine and life eternal, she rests in peace, happy in the knowledge that her work here was of some avail, and that her life so woven in and out with ours has added lustre to our Aid Society she loved so well.

There is no death, the leaves may fall,
And flowers may fade and pass away;
They only wait through wintry hours,
The coming of the May.

There is no death! and angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved ones away,
And then we call them dead.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life, There are no dead."

Jay Boone Married

The following item we clip from the Jackson Daily News and we believe it is of interest to our readers: "Mrs. Clara I. Fox of Jackson and Jay L. Boone of the same place were married at the home of Earl Dean last week Friday evening at 8 o'clock by the Rev. B. H. Taylor" Mr. Boone formerly lived in this village and is well known here. He is employed on the New York Central lines in Jackson. Apropos of this article we note another which says Phil Bogart was arrested on Monday evening by Detectives Stebner and Curtis because he annoyed Mrs. Boone of 505 Oakhill Avenue. Bogart was taken to the police station and locked up on complaint of Mrs. Boone. She had informed the officers previously and as shie came out of the store where she is employed Bogart was seen on the opposite side of the street. and was nabbed by the officers who were shadowing Mrs. Boone.

Bogart's story is that he is a disappointed suitor and had been Mrs. Boone's intimate friend until he learned she had married Boone. Bogart says he had given her a ring and wanted it returned which she refused to do. Hence the annoyance. The whole business will be investigated at once.

This Grade Cow More than Doubled her Milk Yield in 2 Years!

Early in August, 1921, a grade Holstein was received at the Larro Research Farm, and given a number—158.

In 270 days, which constituted her first milking period, she produced 5,651.2 lbs. of milk.

In the first 270 days of her next milking period she produced 10,643.3 lbs.

And in the first 270 days of her third milking period she gave 13,157.1 lbs.

Think of it—an increase of 130% in milk production in two years! And during her first two years on the Larro Farm her weight increased from 843 lbs. to 1226 lbs.—or 45%.

There is real profit in such a cow as No. 158 is today. Yet it does not cost much more to feed and maintain her now than it did when her production was less than half what it is.

The important point to you is that many of your own cows may show equally satisfactory results with the same management and care—plus Larro.

You can easily prove that Larro is a money-maker by trying it on your herd and keeping records of milk produced per dollar spent for feed.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Kellogg to Succeed Hughes as Secretary of State—No Change of Policy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WASHINGTON and the country generally were taken quite by surprise by the announcement that Secretary of State Hughes would retire from the cabinet on March 4. There had been no previous intimation of this change although it was known that Mr. Hughes wished to resume the practice of law within a few years at most. He has been in the public service almost continuously for twenty years. The correspondence between him and the President concerning his resignation reveals no basis for report that there had been any conflict of views and those close to the White House say Mr. Hughes was the first cabinet member whom Mr. Coolidge asked to remain in his official family.

The President selected Ambassador Frank B. Kellogg to succeed Mr. Hughes, and the choice has met with no adverse criticism. Mr. Kellogg has gained a clear insight into the affairs of Europe and especially the settlement of German reparations and interallied debts. His ability is unquestioned. Those who jumped to the conclusion that his coming to the Department of State would lead to American adhesion to the League of Nations probably will have to change their opinion, but it is known that he favors the continuation of our government's co-operation with the league in handling humanitarian and social problems. Many persons, here and abroad, who think America should recognize the Soviet government of Russia also hailed the advent of Mr. Kellogg—or rather the retirement of Mr. Hughes—as a sign that the administration's policy in this matter would be changed, because Mr. Hughes has been unalterably against any relations with Russia in present conditions. These persons, too, are deceiving themselves. The President authorized the statement that he continued to oppose recognition of the Soviet government until it agrees to compensate American citizens robbed by the Communists, to recognize the war debt of Russia to the United States and to cease trying to undermine the American form of government. Mr. Coolidge still hopes, however, that Russia will meet these conditions and that relations with her can be resumed. Great Britain and France are pleased with the appointment of Mr. Kellogg, who has shown sympathy with the aspirations of both nations. The French hope he will favor certain ameliorations in their debt to America.

To succeed Mr. Kellogg at the court of St. James, the President chose Alanson B. Houghton, now ambassador to Germany. He has handled the difficult work in Berlin so skillfully that it was felt he had earned the promotion. German statesmen have learned to admire him immensely.

NOTWITHSTANDING the united opposition of the Michigan congressional delegation, President Coolidge insisted on appointing Charles Beecher Warren to succeed Mr. Stone as attorney general, and the senate showed no inclination to refuse confirmation. Mr. Coolidge yet has to find a man for secretary of agriculture, and then his cabinet presumably will be complete, for rumors of still other changes are now denied. Secretary of Labor Davis, who wished to retire, has consented to remain, his leave of absence as head of the Loyal Order of Moose having been extended. Postmaster General New, Secretary of War Weeks and Secretary of the Interior Work, who it was reported would step out, evidently have been invited to remain and have agreed to do so.

For the agriculture portfolio the President believes a marketing expert must be found, and he hasn't yet discovered him, though many men have been recommended for the post. He feels that the department has solved the problems of development and organization of agricultural production but that the marketing of farm products remains the weak spot.

C. Bascom Slemp has resigned as secretary to the President, according to a White House announcement, and Representative Everett Sanders of Indiana has been named to succeed him, a choice which is liked in congressional circles. Mr. Sanders was head of the speakers' bureau at Chicago during the last campaign. He was not a candidate for re-election to congress and so cannot be classed among the "lame ducks."

ACCORDING to the preliminary report of the President's commission on agricultural problems, cattle raising is the only branch of the industry that needs immediate relief, and Mr. Coolidge has undertaken to procure that relief from congress before March 4. If this is done there will be no need of an extra session of the new congress. The commission recommends only one piece of emergency legislation, namely, the amending of the agricultural credits act so as to permit the rediscounting by intermediate credit banks of loans negotiated by federally chartered agricultural credit agencies.

In addition, the commission recommends certain administrative actions by government agencies, including these:

Inauguration by the federal farm loan board of a campaign for the organization of discount agencies as a means of obtaining loans from intermediate credit banks to assist live stock raisers.

A review of the personnel of the intermediate credit banks to make it certain the employees include persons conversant and sympathetic with the needs of agriculture, including live stock.

A special report by the chairman of the federal farm loan board by July 1, 1925, indicating such progress as has been made in meeting the emergency in the live stock industry.

An early and thorough revision of freight rates to relieve the raw products of agriculture and live stock from a disproportionate share of transportation costs.

The commission found the cattle raising industry suffers from lack of tariff protection for hides and meat products, and urges a uniform policy on grazing on public lands and in the national forests. In general, the commission declared that confidence in the future of the live stock industry was warranted.

ONE more high hurdle was cleared last week when the allied financial conference in Paris reached full agreement as to the division of German funds and the accords were signed by the great powers. The United States got all it had asked—2¼ per cent of the reparations annuities under the Dawes plan until all its claims are paid—and just before the close of the discussion the delegates consented to eliminate a clause by which America's claims for war damages were limited to $350,000,000. The settlement of the occupation army costs gives America $13,750,000 annually. Credit for the recognition of America's claims goes mainly to Col. James A. Logan and to Ambassadors Kellogg and Herrick. Many of the small nations were grievously disappointed at receiving no share of the German reparations. The delegates of the big powers listened sympathetically to their plaints but told them there was no money available for them.

ETIENNE CLEMENTEL, French minister of finance, has handed to the British government a memorandum agreeing in principle with the British view that Great Britain must exact from her debtors sums sufficient to cover her debt to America; but he demands a moratorium for France in case Germany defaults, and also demands equal facilities to those accorded Germany in the event of her lapsing in Dawes plan payments. English treasury officials see some justice in this, but are likely to ask that the United States make equal facilities for payments by Great Britain.

HAVING spent several days playing ring-around-the-rosy with the Muscle Shoals proposition, the senate finally passed the Underwood bill by a vote of 50 to 30. It is now a substitute for the Henry Ford measure which the house passed last session, so its final enactment by congress is uncertain. First the senate approved the Underwood bill; then it substituted the Jones bill for further investigation by a commission; next it approved the Norris government ownership bill; again it substituted the Underwood for the Norris measure, and defeated the Jones bill in two forms. Then came final passage of the Underwood bill with the aid of Republicans who had supported the Jones measure. As adopted the bill authorizes the President to lease Muscle Shoals for fifty years, but provides that if a suitable lease cannot be made by next September the property is to be operated by a government corporation.

ACCORDING to figures given out by the census bureau, the wealth of the United States at the close of 1922 was $320,803,862,000, which means an increase of 72.2 per cent in the decade beginning 1912. Real estate and its taxable improvements are in the lead in values, being placed at $155,908,625,000. Personal property is next, at nearly forty billions, and manufactured products on hand were third, with a valuation of more than twenty-eight billions.

In listing the wealth by states, the bureau placed New York first with a total of $37,035,262,000. Following that state in order given were Pennsylvania, $28,833,745,000; Illinois, $22,282,794,000; Ohio, $18,489,552,000; California, $15,031,734,000; Massachusetts, $12,980,329,000; New Jersey, $11,794,189,000; Michigan, $11,404,861,000, and Iowa, $10,511,682,000. All others fell below $10,000,000,000. Nevada had the smallest amount, $541,716,000.

JUST before he retired from the office of governor of Kansas, Jonathan M. Davis was arrested on charges of soliciting and accepting a bribe for a pardon. A warrant was served also on his son, Russell G. Davis, and immediately Carl J. Peterson, state bank commissioner, was involved in the same scandal. Both the elder Davis and Peterson have strenuously denied their guilt and have issued various statements. The younger Davis, who had accepted marked money and who was trapped by an arrangement of telephones, is said by his father to have been ensnared by the political enemies of the former governor.

DR. HANS LUTHER, former minister of finance, took up the task of forming a cabinet for Germany after Herr Marx had failed, and presented a list of ministers that is strongly monarchistic, though Luther himself declared he as chancellor would carry out the Marx policies. Stresemann remains as foreign minister, and Martin Schiele, official leader of the kaiserists, is minister of the interior. The Catholics were given several portfolios and agreed to support the government's program. The Republicans, who won in the reichstag elections, are deprived of the fruits of victory because their various elements would not get together.

BY A VOTE of 172 to 65 the house passed the McFadden bill for revision of the banking laws. This measure is designed to put national banks on a better competitive basis with state institutions, particularly with regard to maintenance of branches. As reported to the house, the measure gave national banks the right to maintain intracity branches, where state banks are permitted to do a branch banking business, but amendments by Representative M. D. Hull, which the house accepted, placed restrictions on the maintenance of these branches.

The Hull amendments provide that in states hereafter legalizing branch banking, national banks must obtain authority from congress before establishing branches. In such instances, state banks would be denied privileges of the federal reesrve system until national banks were accorded the right to compete with branches.

FIGHTING has been renewed in the Shanghai region and is believed to be the prelude for a general civil war in the spring. The city is now in the possession of Marshals Chi-Hsieh-yuan of Kiangsu and Sun Chuan-fang of Chekiang, and they announce they have formed a new alliance of those provinces and Fukien, Anhwei and Szechwan to oppose the Peking government. There was much looting in the native city of Shanghai, and the foreign settlement now swarms with fugitive soldiers from the defeated armies. American, British, French and Japanese marines have been landed to protect the settlement.

War Had Bad Effect on Missionaries' Work

New York.—The war caused the withdrawal of all Protestant foreign missionaries from 219 residence stations, which are today either not occupied at all or are in the hands of Christian nationals, according to data compiled for a world missionary atlas to be published by the Institute of Social and Religious Research.

Of the stations completely vacated 126 are in Africa, 58 in India, 21 in western Asia, 11 in Netherlands Indies and the remainder in scattered areas. For the most part the stations vacated were occupied before the war by continental missionaries. But despite the war, operations are shown by the new atlas to be on a very much greater scale now than at the beginning of the century.

There are missionaries in residence at 4,598 stations, not including American church workers in Europe outside of Turkey in Europe, or workers among European immigrants in the United States and Canada, but including workers among American Indians and Asiatic immigrants here and in Canada.

Since 1900, according to the atlas figures, the number of Protestant communicants has increased in Asia from 622,460 to 1,533,057; in Africa from 342,857 to 1,015,683, not including Europeans permanently resident there; in Australasia, Netherlands Indies and the Pacific islands, from 117,092 to 647,728, counting only aboriginal or indigenous populations.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Committee Appointments Are Made By Wells For Present Session.

Lansing—Speaker Fred B. Wells has announced his committee appointments for the 1925 session of the House and in so doing has made it plain that although he wants the members of the two factions which supported him to be in a position to control legislation of every sort, he also intends that the groups that did not vote for him, the Wayne County delegation especially, to have a voice on every subject.

For the most part, the important chairmanships went to the men who held them in 1923. Rep. Charles Evans, of Tipton, retained his chairmanship of the taxation committee. Rep. Nelson G. Farrier, of Hillman, retained his chairmanship of the ways and means committee, and Rep. Charles H. Culver, of Detroit, retained his chairmanship of the rules committee.

Rep. Miles S. Curtiss, of Battle Creek, former chairman of the committee on city corporations, was given direction of the important committee on state affairs, and Rep. Ate Dykstra, of Grand Rapids, was elevated to the vacant chairmanship of the city corporations committee.

Senate Hears Welsh

Reminding members of the senate of their oath to uphold the state's constitution to which they subscribed a few days ago, Lieutenant Governor George W. Welsh called upon them to enact constitutional reapportionment.

Welsh's plea came in the course of his sessional message to the senate, and it carried out the policy which marked Welsh's service as speaker of the house of representatives in 1923.

Lieutenant Governor Welsh also drew the attention of the senate to the grave issues involved in the child labor amendment to the federal constitution, which comes before this session of the legislature for ratification or rejection. Of this he said:

"Among other questions that will be presented, you will be asked to pass judgment upon an amendment to the federal constitution. In the consideration of this you should keep in mind the fundamental relation of the state to the nation. You should consider well whether or not more power should be granted to the federal government, especially over such matters as we are competent to decide for ourselves."

To Fight For Blue Laws

Virgil A. Fitch, of Ludington, the former prosecutor of Mason County, who leaped into fame back in the summer of 1923 by attempting to enforce the old Sunday blue laws, announced that he would resist any attempt to repeal or weaken those same laws. Questioned regarding his present attitude toward the various amusements and various activities which might be curtailed if the blue laws were enforced, Rep. Fitch stated that he believes that moving picture shows, garages, gasoline stations and hotels should be open on Sunday and that ball games should not be interfered with but that Sunday dances should be stopped.

Bill For Bank Control

A bill to bring private banks under the control of the state banking commission was introduced in the house by Representative Edward R. Carter, Gladstone, and referred to the banking committee. The bill prohibits banking by other than incorporated companies and gives the private banks one year in which to conform to the law. It requires private banks to incorporate and before a bank charter is given, the capital stock shall not be less than $20,000. Half of the stock must be paid in before the charter is granted.

To Curb Financing

Representative Milton Palmer, of Detroit, announced he would immediately introduce in the house three bills calculated to put pep into the state's blue sky law and curb crooked financing institutions. The first bill would increase the securities commission from one to three men, working on full time. The second would place all financing companies, except building and loan associations, under the supervision of the state banking department. The third would deal with penalties.

Names Woman Chairman

Mrs. Cora Reynolds Anderson, first woman member of the House of Representatives, will have the added distinction of being on a committee in her first term. Speaker Fred B. Wells has decided to name her to head the committee on the Industrial Home for Girls at Adrian. Only a favored few first termers are given chairmanships.

Many Bills To Come

A grist of bills probably will make their appearance in the next few days. The Governor, in his message, pointed out that the control of trunk line highway routes and construction should be centralized in the State Highway Department. A measure providing for this change will undoubtedly be offered. Other suggestions will be taken care of in bills to be submitted. The Governor is expected to go over the highway situation with some members of the Legislature.

Agree On Tax Plan

The senate committee on taxation has reported to vote out a two-cent gasoline bill which would be given immediate effect. The bill is sponsored by Senator Orville A. Wood, of Newaygo, and provides that revenue up to $2,500,000 shall go for back rewards, $2,000,000 for interest and sinking fund, $500,000 for construction of non-trunk line bridges, and the balance for new non-trunk line constructions. The bill is expected to supercede the Baxter gasoline tax bill and have administration approval.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Road Building Far Behind the Automobile

Millions now recognize the automobile as a necessity. It is no longer a luxury for the few. Sixty per cent of its use is for business.

Because of this the modern paved highway has become an economic necessity.

Yet although the mileage of Concrete Roads and Streets has been steadily increasing, our highway system today lags far behind the automobile. The great majority of our highways are as out of date as the single-track, narrow gauge railway of fifty years ago.

Such a condition not only seriously handicaps the progress of the automobile as a comfortable, profitable means of transportation, but also holds back commercial, industrial and agricultural advancement in practically every section of the country. It is costing taxpayers millions of dollars annually.

Highway building should be continued and enlarged upon.

Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support. Tell them you are ready to invest in more and wider Concrete Highways now.

WOMAN'S COURAGE FOILS BANDITS

Grapples With Armed Robbers Who Attempt to Hold Up Her Bank.

UNARMED, WINS LONG FIGHT

One Bandit Killed and Other Wounded When Men Come to Rescue—Story Told at National Meeting of Bankers.

When the wave of crime against banks, which has reached unprecedented proportions, was under discussion at the recent meeting of the American Bankers Association at Chicago, and defense measures were up for consideration, the bankers were told how one resolute woman defended herself against two armed desperadoes in her little Western bank. The woman was Mrs. Mary Garlinghouse, cashier of the State Bank of Vera, Oklahoma, which she conducts single-handed. Her own story, as she told it in a report to the protective authorities of the Association, follows:

"While I was posting my ledger, with my back to the door, I heard a commotion. When I turned around there were two men back of the counter, with handkerchiefs over their faces. The larger made a jump for my gun, before I realized what was happening. The robbers each had a gun pointed at me, and one said, 'Lay down or I will shoot you!' I said, 'I will not lay down and 'you will not shoot me.' This conversation was repeated several times. I told them to cut out their foolishness.

"A man who was in the corridor when the bandits came laid down on the floor, face down. I tried to argue with the robbers and they began to get rough, but something within me seemed to realize that they were getting confused. I kept thinking that some one would come in or see us.

"The larger man got busy with the money, while the smaller one took care of me. He jerked me to my knees and hit me over the head. This jolted my glasses and I lifted my hand, waving it in front of his face and telling him to wait a minute. I took my glasses off and put them on the table. Lifting my hand caused this man to look up and he saw we were observed from across the street. Then he saw Constable Mosby, with his gun, and said to the man who was gathering the money, 'Don, we are seen, we must make our getaway!' He then grabbed me rather roughly and said: 'Come on here! You are coming along!'

Struggles With Robber

"Here is where our struggle began. All the time we fought over his gun, I did not try to take it away from him, but kept moving it from one side to the other, and of course he was determined to point it straight at me. I told him, 'I will not go and I am not afraid of you. You will not shoot me!'

"We fought to the back door of the bank. When we got there, he raised his arm to fire at Mosby. I grabbed him around the neck, and he fired before I could get his hand. I am positive that this man was never hugged so tightly, nor ever will be, as I hugged him, realizing that I must fight for my life. The man tried his level best to kill me. What the other man was doing I do not know. My man was trying to pull me out the back door to their car, which was still running, I was determined he should not.

"R. C. Lapsley, the mayor, or Ed. Mosby shot the man in the arm. There was a jerk and out the door we went. Things were coming my way now. I pulled the robber into the weeds, half on his back and half on his left side.

"The robber finally said, 'I will give up.' I said, 'Give me your gun.' He answered, 'I will not; I know you will shoot me.' So the struggle kept on. We got back on our feet. I meant to have his gun and would fight him until I got it. We fought through the back room behind the counter. He begged me not to take him, and I asked him again for his gun and he said, 'No, I know you will shoot me.' We struggled through the front door and then Constable Mosby said, 'Drop your gun or I will shoot you.' The bandit gave up and the men took charge of him.

One Bandit Killed

"I wondered about the other bandit and started to look for him and found him in the closet in the back of the bank dying. R. C. Lapsley told me afterwards that when the bandit and I lurched through the back door the larger man, with his gun in his right hand and the sack of money in his left, stepped up to the door. They both fired at once. The robber dropped his gun and the money, but they could not see what became of him.

"If all towns had as brave men as we have here, bank robbing would be a thing of the past. You can understand the remarkable marksmanship that was displayed, when I tell you that in our struggle at the back of the bank the men took several shots at the robber, but were very careful not to hit me. The robber got a shot in his right arm and a glancing shot in his left.

"All during the shooting and fighting, I felt confident I would get the best of my man. I felt that the man would not shoot me, and like all Western women did not lose my nerve. Bank robbers, as a rule, are cowards and if one shows that he is not afraid of them they will lose their nerve."

MILLIONS IDLE NOW

Steady Increase in Unemployment Reported by Department of Labor.

Washington, D. C.—In a recent statement given to the press, Chairman Butler of the Republican National Committee says that every nation engaged in the World War has had to wrestle with the problem of post-war unemployment, that the other nations are still in the problem's throes, and that "the Republican administration of the United States alone has solved the issue."

The Department of Labor, with a Republican Secretary in charge, in an industrial survey made public in August, presents some interesting figures Mr. Butler ought to study.

With 1923 employment as 100, the index figure, Secretary Davis' Labor Department shows that employment was greater in 1917 than it has been at any time covered by its survey, and stood then at 115. It is estimated that there are 20,000,000 workers, skilled and unskilled, organized and unorganized, in the country, exclusive of farm labor. With employment at its peak in 1917, the 20,000,000 workers were all employed.

In 1919, the first post-war year, under a Democratic administration, the index figure of employment stood at 108.4, or 6.6 points under 1917, so that the number of unemployed was about 1,100,000.

In 1920, the last Democratic year, the index figure stood at 109.8, so that of the 20,000,000 workers, about 865,000 were unemployed.

For 1921—the Harding-Coolidge administration began in March of that year—the index figure stood at 5.3, and 5,100,000 of the 20,000,000 workers were idle.

Liquor Causes Dastardly Murder

Bad booze and jealousy have another killing to their credit this week. On Monday morning at 8:00 a family was terribly disrupted and six small children made orphans by the shot gun route at Jackson. A man named Bottorf in a drunken jealous stupor arose in the morning ahead of the entire family, took a borrowed double-barrelled shot-gun and killed his sleeping wife, then fastening a string to the trigger, placed the muzzle to his face and blew his head off.

The crime was first discovered when the daughter came down stairs about nine o'clock. She ran to the neighbor's, who reported to the coroner and sheriff. Coroner Pulling stated the scene was one of the worst he ever witnessed, as both bodies lay in a pool of blood, and the walls were spattered with blood and parts of the skull.

Bottorf's family consisted of six children ranging in ages from nine to a baby about one year old.

Authorities are awaiting the arrival of relatives from Iowa who will take charge of the children and the bodies, as the couple have no relatives here. The neighborhood where the tragedy occurred must be quite cosmopolitan, since the houses are close together and a number heard the shots but paid no attention.

We are not going to preach any sermons on this text—we'll leave that to the ministers, but the man or women who dealt out Bottorf's liquor should be given the punishment of the dark ages. Every bootlegger and ever private distiller in Michigan should be rounded up and compelled to watch the proceedings, and one after another disposed of in like manner until it is obvious the lesson has been sufficiently absorbed to stop all practice of this kind in the future.

Detroit Automobile Club Objects

An association of heavy gas users in Detroit, composed mostly of business men who drive constantly short distances in the city each day and during the season take long jaunts to northern and southern resorts, are coming out with a terrible "yell" against the passage of a gas tax of two cents per gallon. On what grounds we have not yet learned but it is obvious the law would be against their interests in many ways. Well, after all is said and done, the gas tax would probably furnish Michigan with several millions extra and possibly we dont need these millions. There ought to be enough new machines in use this coming year to make up a big deficiency, but the legislators are determined to promote the good roads question and positively do not want the program for 1925 held up. Of course we know that good roads are the best asset of a prosperous nation. The Romans in Rome's imperial day built many of them and built so much better than we know how to do to-day, that automobiles are now traversing the Appian Way.

Julius Cæsar turned his attention to constructing highways and the World marveled while it paid tribute to Rome. His road work was performed by inexpensive slave labor of which we have a prototype in prison labor.

At any event it would be poor policy to hold up road building but the gas tax may yet strike a snag or something else to hold it up until 1926, but in any event the weight tax goes on. There will probably be some rush to buy light cars but the fact remains that those who have ridden in the large machine will be pretty slow in adopting a less comfortable vehicle even if the gas and weight tax both become a law. Though it may cost a few extra dollars those who drive long distances will hesitate considerably before they make the change.

Williams Introduces Bill

An important bill to amend the Federal Trade Commission Act was simultaneously introduced in the Senate chamber by Senator James Wadsworth of New York and in the House by Representative A. B Williams of Michigan Wednesday January 21, and these two gentlemen united in the following statement: "This bill has been prepared by attorneys who have had a wide experience. The purpose of the bill is to meet criticisms as to the scope and activity of the Federal Trade Commission and to provide for a constructive and helpful administration of the Act governing the Commission. It is realized that the Federal Trade Commission has a wide field of proper and useful activity. The measure was enacted by Congress in the first instance as an instrument of constructive and helpful service to American business, to be applied in pursuance of a policy and proceedure that would deal justly with the rightful interests of all concerned and stop the use of competitive methods which are improper, unfair and against public policy."

Y. W. C. A. Endorses Dancing

The Advocate supposed the Young Woman's Christian Association was a real pious association but it seems not. They used to be considered particular about such things but that has gone past. In a recent issue of the Jackson Daily News we note that the Jackson Y. W. C. A. will give [illegible] uary 2[illegible]

The Advocate don't wish to be fussy or prudish, but it really seems as if the Churches and religious bodies which endorse dancing are somewhat loose in their morals and need patching up. We'll leave it to any sane person on this earth if the present form of "bunny hug" "fox trot" business is not decidedly damaging to the morals of the young or the old. It makes no difference who sponsors the public dance it sure is a passion awakening process and if there are any who can disprove that statement we stand corrected. Now its quite indecent to talk of, isn't it? If its indecent to talk of, we should think it decidedly indecent to perform. But then, who knows? Maybe the day is coming when by the process of evolution there will be nothing wrong with any licentiousness.

This Foolish "Flapper" Came to Grief

Dorothy Ellinson of San Francisco today sits in a solitary cell at the police station awaiting trial for murder. Dorothy is pretty, 16 years of age, bobs her locks and should be a decent law abiding young women but Alas! Not for her.

She confessed to the officers that she had killed her own mother because the women objected to her daughter's being so wild and spending her nights in dissipation. Dorothy seemingly cares little about her predicament and indications are she is hardened until her conscience is a veritable flint. The poor foolish little girl! She is a product of the present day civilization and instead of punishing her they should take the modern reformists and social set to the woods and give them a flogging with a none too gentle cat-o-nine-tails. How many of Dorothy's kind we find running the streets today, right in our own neighborhoods. Bent on "having a good time" and already started on the downward course.

The Rural Delivery of Michigan

Thirty four years ago the fifth of this month Rural Free delivery was born in the brain of a Postmaster General, John Wanamaker of Philadelphia and it had to wait another year before Congress saw fit to recognize it as anything worth bothering with at which time Representative Jim O'Donnel of Michigan introduced a bill to adopt Free delivery of mail in rural districts. He figured it would take $6,000,000 to start the ball rolling but Congress snowed it under and O'Donnell was severely ridiculed as a dreamer and an idealist. In fact Robert Fulton and Morse had nothing on him for the abuse he had to take. Finally the bill got through and an experimental route was started in three counties in West Virginia. It worked out as good and practical that in nine months time 82 routes from 43 postoffices in 29 states were established. It required $10,000 to put it in operation at the time but now it costs $89,250,000 annually and pays for itself so we understand. Thirty years you could hardly make the farmers believe they would ever have mail brought to the kitchen door and many of them thought it a vision of some crazy dreamer. Michigan naturally lead out as she does in many things until at the present time she has 1830 routes; Illinois has 2637 routes with a mileage of 70,677; Ohio is second, Missouri third, and so it goes.

What it means to the rural community to be thus connected with the outside world no one can estimate correctly, but suffice to say that if it cost thousands more than it earned the farmers would not go back to the old time methods and become isolated from the home town or city.

BRIGHT FUTURE FOR TROOPERS IN ALL STATES

MICHIGAN COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC SAFETY SEES SPREAD OF SYSTEM FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT

EXPLAINS TROOPERS DUTIES

State Police Earn Their Way By Returns to State Treasury

"I see a great future for state police organizations in the states which now have them. Further than that I predict that a great many other states will sooner or later have such organizations."

Harry H. Jackson, commissioner of the Michigan Department of Public Safety, of which the State Police are the principal unit, was asked the question, "What future do you see for such organizations as the Michigan State Police after completing a full year in the work?" and the above was his answer.

Commissioner Jackson was appointed to head the Michigan Department by Governor Groesbeck in October, 1923. He remained in command all through 1924. Although a man of long police experience, most of his life in fact, he had always served a local police department. At the time he became attached to the state organization he was head of the traffic division of the Detroit (Mich.) police department with the rank of inspector and the manner in which he handled the traffic situation in the city of Detroit had much to do with Governor A. J. Groesbeck selecting him to head the Department of Public Safety.

"The success of the State Police organizations in the states that now have them assures their future, in my opinion," said Commissioner Jackson, "and the successes already obtained and those of the future, will lead other states to fall into line and adopt such law enforcing agencies. As time goes on and situations develop in states that do not have a State Police force, similar to situations which have been met and conquered by State Police forces, strict law enforcement advocates will realize how their states can profit as others did and urge the passage of necessary laws creating the organization of State Police units."

Force Earns Its Way

"If properly managed, a State Police force can be made to be almost self sustaining. That could be made possible by having a large portion of the fines collected in State Police convictions and perhaps some of the other fees collected in the work revert back to the operation of the force. And in connection with this question I want to stress upon a saving that is made to the counties through the State Police. In Michigan, and I suppose it is the same in most other states, the counties allow their sheriff's department certain amounts each year for hiring special deputies and other such assistance as he may need. A State Police organziation does, to a large extent, relieve that burden because a most important part of the work is close cooperation with the local officers, particularly the county officers whose territory is wide."

Commissioner Jackson said that his department has sent out a number of bulletins to the sheriff's departments in every county in the state informing them that the State Police is at their disposal and advising where the nearest State Police post is located and how it can be reached in the shortest possible time, day or night.

Duties Are Numerous

The Michigan force is composed of about 180 men, 150 of whom are in uniform, the others doing plain clothes work, handling investigations, etc., in which a uniform would endanger the results.

In addition to doing general police work the Michigan State Police do traffic work, conduct inspections of oil entering the state, transfer of prisoners from state institution to state institution, assist in investigations of suspected arson cases, and have the supervision of men paroled from prison.

The Department of Public Safety is divided into several divisions. One is the State Police, and others are the fire marshal's division, bureau of identification and the detective bureau, all manned by state policemen. The fire marshal's division until a few years ago was a separate department of state government. About two years ago the bureau of identification was organized and the detective bureau was started during Commissioner Jackson's regime. The oil inspection work comes under the fi[illegible]shal's division and the superv[illegible] paroled men is a part of the [illegible] Police division.

He has attended each session since 1915, serving on such important committees as legislation and on several important special committees. During 1923, he was delegated as the representative of the Sovereign Grand Lodge to make a complete survey of the Order in Cuba, and upon his findings a Grand Lodge charter was granted to Cuba at the recent session in Jacksonville. In the ten years he served in the Sovereign Grand Lodge his friends became universal. Possessed of a genial personality, democratic manner, yet dignified as becomes one in his position, and having the faculty for remembering names and faces, he soon was able to greet the membership without constant introductions, which won him friends from all quarters of the world of Odd Fellowship, and who soon learned to know him, just as his brothers in Michigan know him, by his first name, "Herb."

One of the big problems that has been before the Sovereign Grand Lodge and which was solved at its recent session, was the much discussed question whether the Order should establish a juvenile branch or reduce the age of admission. After viewing both questions from all sides, the Sovereign Grand Lodge decided on reducing the age of admission to 18 years. The new law goes into effect January 1st next, and it is hoped will add thousands of young men to this splendid fraternal society.

Odd Fellowship in Michigan has made wonderful advancement in recent years, until now its membership numbers 92,600 in 550 subordinate lodges. In addition to this it has the Rebekah branch with a membership of 64,000 in 485 lodges. Further honoring its Grand Sire, it is proposed to make an intensive drive to increase the membership to 100,000. With the new field of young men to draw from it is proposed to make a special effort by designating a certain time in which to initiate classes of young men between the ages of 18 and 21.

Odd Fellowship is purely a fraternal society. While it pays to its sick and injured members, certain benefits that is by no means its predominant feature. It seeks to be a helpful factor in the civic life of every community, building up a better citizenship and rendering aid where most needed. Its social activities are leading factors in the life of the Order, and it has expended magnificent sums in lodge building alone. Its relief work for the past year reached the splendid sum of $158,570. That is Michigan's record alone. Any society that carries on a worthy work of this nature not only does credit to itself but relieves the community in which it exists from performing a duty that would naturally fall upon it.

Several years ago, the Grand Lodge recognized the necessity of making provision for those of its members who, because of adverse circumstances would become the objects of charity; therefore an Odd Fellows Home was established at Jackson, Michigan that now has a main adult building, an orphanage and other buildings, with 190 acres of farm lands of a value of $250,000. There are 120 residents at the Home, and an annual appropriation of $50,000 is made for its maintenance. An endowment fund was established a few years ago into which is paid all voluntary contributions made to the Home, and on several occasions prominent members of the Order have made provision in their wills for certain sums of money or property to go in this fund, until today it has reached the sum of $107,000.

Going into the broader field of its activities we find that $7,808,913.47 was spent during the past year for relief work by the Order at large. But the great field of Odd Fellowship is pure fraternity, where men get a contact with one another that ripens into the finest friendships. Odd Fellowship offers the broadest field for working out many of the problems of the day, where the man or the woman can get the broader touch and wider field of activity through organized effort.

When one looks back to the foundation of Odd Fellowship in America and finds that its inception was the efforts of but five men, he is reminded that there surely must have been something more than the ordinary that built up a membership of such stupendous numbers. When we review its splendid activities during the years that are past, we recognize th[illegible] it has an abiding place in the [illegible] every community to make it [illegible] of the best thou[illegible]t of every [illegible] who desires [illegible] a part [illegible] elevating of [illegible] character building [illegible] citizenship

IMPROVEMENT IS CONSTANT

I'm a wanderer. I'm not too proud to keep interestingcompany I've been from central New York to Texas and west to California in my automobile the past twenty months. I've had three chances to drink in that time. I've seen not more than six drunks, except that in one hamlet in the Ozarks, I saw one store where the crowd were openly whooping and waving their bottles, ten or twelve men. Before prohibition I saw thousands of drunks, on one motorcycle trip from New York to the Dakotas. Thousands!

Liquor hasn't made any hyprocrites who weren't hypocrites before prohibition.

For every man drinking now, from ten to fifty have stopped drinking, and the proportion among working men's families as far higher. I can show you whole industries where liquor held almost 100 per cent sway; it now hasn't five per cent on its workers. I can show you a tannery, textile mills, whole trades in this—not to mention railroad men, who were going dry before prohibition came to the national assistance.

The price of real estate throughout the cities and communities of the country has gone up 50 percent to 100 per cent because homes are being bought under prohibition instead of liquors.

Four years ago, in California, I saw a lot of drunks. I haven't seen one from October to June this past winter. The improvement is constant, and incredibly high.

I did my bit in politics, some twelve, long, hard and thankless years. I went through from the ward and city politics to country districts. I made such a study of it that I could write a 70,000 word book about it;getting out a vote, the fighting, the phases from gin-mill grip to the W. C. T. U. influence. I played jig-time tunes on the lacerated souls of the bosses and rings and voters—with my typewriter. I especially studied the saloons, their personnel, place, conditions.

I can show you bartenders, saloonkeepers, before and after. I can show you the bootleggers. You can't find one bootlegger to five licensed ante-prohibition liquor dealers or employees. In New York City you can't find one in ten. Try it.

My job is educational, of course What I know I whoop from a tall building. Glory be if I can help the other fellow!

DRYS WIN MAIN STREET

I saw liquor power, before prohibition came, lifted from the throats of business in my home town, a booze town, two to one booze, on the vote.

The liquor crowd told the merchants on Main Street to back booze or the liquor crowd would blacklist them. Then three women drys went to Main Street and asked the merchants if they preferred the trade of the wets to that of the drys. Darn hard place for the merchants but they stopped fighting the drys and some turned around and helped, to the extent of putting their names on a petition for a local option election. We lost that election, but since prohibition came the gin-mills went from a business of $600,000 a year to less than $100,000 bootleg, and a town of 12,000 that couldn't support a restaurant in liquor years now has at least three restaurants. The saloons are occupied, now, by shoe and grocery and clothing and other stores. Tell me that prohibition isn't enforced?

Where's the Home Brew contingent? For a time everybody made home brew. They've quit. There are fewer liquor law violations than short weighing, short measuring, price-fixing and other crimes of the great middle class merchants right now. You wouldn't say repeal the game and fish laws because they are violated.

The analogy between game law and liquor law violation is almost exact. Good sports, their fun and fury interrupted, they wouldn't quit killing God's own wild creatures, nor stop drinking when it interfered with their personal liberties. I [illegible] the beg[illegible] game law around some on that proposition on both sides the fence myself.

TEN MILLION WOMEN DRY

And don't think any large percentage of people want liquor to come back. If the Woman's Christian Temperance Union could put prohibition over—what do you think 10,000,000 dry federated American women are going to do about it? What did they do in the Republican National Convention what are they doing, right now, to the old Barbary Coast in California to the road houses of California, to the largest cities and smallest hamlets of the country, right now?

More than 80 percent of the women voters are dry, absolutely. 50 percent of them have the political spirit of Carrie Nation (who will some day have a monument like the Statue of Liberty erected to her, with her hatchet in hand), and I'll tell you that there is in all the educational world no such terrific and significant exposure of the futility of the lurking, furtive and clandestine attacks on the Constitution of the United States as the fact that booze could find one, and only one, college president, Nick Butler, to support it.

Passage of Gas Tax With Lower License Assured

Prospects look bright for a satisfactory solution of the perplexing problems of highway finance. Senators and Representatives gathering here today for the third week of the session seem agreed upon a general plan of procedure worked out at a conference held between Senate and House leaders and Governor Groesbeck.

Such strong support and popular demand for a two cent gasoline tax or of passing a one cent levy has been abandoned. The present plan includes the passage of a two-cent gasoline tax and the enactment of lower license rates to be fixed on the weight basis alone with horse power eliminated from consideration.

With this agreement reached, the Senate Committee an Taxation reported out a gas tax bill sponsored by Senator Orville E. Atwood of Newaygo as a substitute for Senator Baxter's bill. The substitute, known as the Atwood-Baxter bill was referred to the Committee on Finance and Appropriations which immediately went into session and reported the bill out promptly with the recommendation that it pass. It is now at the head of General Orders and probably will be reported favorably by the Committee of the whole today or tomorrow. It is expected that it will be passed by the Senate and sent to the House this week.

As a companion measure to this gas tax, Representative Chas Evans of Tipton, Chairman of the House Committee on General Taxation, and one of the staunch leaders of the gas tax bloc, has introduced an amendment to the present automobile license law, eliminating the horse power feature and putting the licensing on a straight weight basis. The rate now in the bill is 65 cents per cwt. for pleasure cars and trucks up to 3,000 pounds. For heavier trucks the rate is graduated from 75 cents to $1.00 per cwt. It is understood, however, that these rates will be revised downward in committee. Many upstate Senators and Representatives insist that with a two cent gasoline tax the weight levy should not exceed 50 cents per cwt.

While the Atwood Baxter gas tax and the Evans reduced license fee bills introduced by Senator Baxter of Grand Rapids during the first week, two cent gasoline tax proposals have also been introduced Senator Frank L. Young of Lansing, Representative Ate Dykstra of Grand Rapids, and Representative Loomis K. Preston of St. Joseph.

It is the present plan that both the gas tax and reduced license levies be given immediate effect. Since Governor Groesbeck has promised House and Senate leaders that he will sign whatever gas tax they pass, the prospect looks bright that the matter of highway finance may be definitely settled by February 1st.

With that out of the way there are many other perplexing problems to come up. The whole fight over legislative reapportionment is being held in abeyance until the road program is out of the way. Senator Wood of Detroit has already introduced a bill to double the number Senators from Wayne County, and Representative Culver, also of Detroit, has a bill ready to greatly increase the number of Rrepresentatives from Wayne County in the House. While leaders in bodies have promised that this matter will be given full consideration, it is evident that it will start a big battle and much bitterness will no doubt be developed.

Another distressing problem is in connection with the appropriations for the several state institutions. With budget requests for new buildings alone totalling nearly $19,000,000, the law makers will be perplexed with the bewildering problem of going over these many requests and deciding which to allow and which to defer.

To give them first hand information regarding the actual needs of the various state institutions, it has been decided that as soon as the highway finance program is definitely disposed of, the Legislature will adjourn for a week to allow the members to make their institutional visits or junkets, as they were formerly called.

Among the forty bills already introduced, one which is of outstanding interest to Michigan farmers is that sponsored by Representative W. J. Thomas of Constantine, which would repeal the Covert Highway Law. It is hard to predict whether or not this bill will pass, but it is evident that the Covert Act has lost favor in many parts of the state. Those who urge its repeal declare that it has outlived its usefulness and has become a real burden and a menace.

As usual, some little friction over the matter of week end adjournment is developing between members living relatively near Lansing and those from northern Michigan. The practice of taking a recess from Thursday night until Tuesday afternoon grates on the nerves of those law makers who live too far away to get home and who must remain in Lansing with relatively little to do about half the week.

These adjournments are defended on the ground that they are necessary to allow the committees to consider bills before them and to permit the printing of many bills introduced. It is probable, however, that many of the members like them because it gives them an opportunity to get home to attend to their private business.

Senator W. L. Case of Benzonia favors speeding things up and having shorter sessions. He has introduced a constitutional amendment to limit any regular session to ninety days. This proposal, if passed, would go on the ballot for a referendum vote in November 1926.

Rep. Frank W. McKenzie of Concord is sponsoring a bill to extend the closed season on quail until 1935. The present protection expires this year.

Rep. Orvy Hullett of Armada has introduced a bill to make Eastern time legal throughout Michigan. It is not probable that this proposal will meet with much favor with farmers in western Michigan.

The right of counties to employ public health nurses is provided by a bill introduced by Senator W. L. Case of Benzonia. The bill lays down rights and duties of such nurses but it also specifiies that any citizen has the right to refuse to take any treatment or examination administered by a county nurse

Churches and all religious organizations would be exempt from payment of any state corporation tax fees by the terms of a measure introduced by Rep. George Roxburgh of Reed City. These organizations are now compelled to pay $10 to the state every three years.

For the first five months of 1924, the index figure stood at 94.8, and 8,400,000 workers were idle, while unemployment further increased 4 per cent in July, adding another 135,000-odd workers to the army of unemployed.

What Farmers Need Costs More In 1924

Prices of Agricultural Implements Show Large Increases While Farm Products Decline or Remain Stationary.

Washington, D. C.—Farmers were paying higher prices for the necessities they bought on January 15, 1924, than on the same date of the previous year, according to a report of the Department of Agriculture recently issued. At the same time agricultural producers were receiving less for many of their products last January than in the same month o 1923.

In the latest Year Book of the Department of Agriculture (page 1152) appears a table showing "prices of articles bought by farmers, 1923, and January 15, 1924." There are 69 articles in this list. All but fourteen of them cost the farmer more last January than on January 15, 1923. The increases in 1924 over the prices in 1923 range from a fraction of 1 per cent to 10 and 15 per cent.

Four of the fourteen articles which were cheaper in January this year than last were the farmer's own products—bacon, beans, flour and linseed meal.

Agricultural machinery and implements showed considerable advances in 1924, when cereal grains were selling for less money than for a long time previously. Harrows that cost $53.36 on January 15, 1923, were priced at $57.74 on January 15, 1924; horse-drawn riding plows that sold for $85.10 in 1923 were $95 in in 1924; grain binders were $201.61 in 1923 and $222.81 in 1924. Wagons increased from $123.26 in 1923 to $135.68 in 1924; two-horse sulky hay rakes, from $40.67 to $44.91; 5-foot mowers, from $74.39 to $81.22; centrifugal hand cream separators of 250 gallon capacity, from $79.10 to $85.31.

The same relative increases are to be found throughout the list. Barbed wire went from $4.87 to $5.19 a 100 pounds; dairy milk cans (10 gallons) from $4.85 to $5; binder twine from 13 2-10 cents to 13 6-10 cents a pound; leather horse collars from $5.06 to $5.40 each; rubber boots knee length, from $4.28 to $4.32, wire nails from 5 8-10 cents to 6 2-10 cents; 2-inch framing lumber from $37.87 to $37.51 a 1000 feet; and so through the list of utensils, furniture, clothing, etc. For example, a suit of clothes that cost a farmer $25.83 in 1923 was nearly 5 per cent dearer in 1924, and socks and overalls were, respectively, 11 and 15 per cent higher.

Republican politicians and newspapers are telling farmers that the tariff is an advantage to them. It is evident, however, that while the tariff on agricultural products is practically worthless to the producer it is collectible from him on what he buys from others in the way of necessaries.

There is an attempt to prove that the tariff does not influence the cost of agricultural machinery and implements because these are on the free list. Farmers are not told that the iron and steel from which these machines and implements are manufactured are taxed heavily. This tax increases the cost of agricultural machinery and implements about $100,000,000 a year.

DAVIS BECOMES BOY SCOUT IN COLORADO

Denver, Colo.—When John W. Davis, Democratic presidential candidate, was in Colorado recent he climbed to an altitude of 9,500 feet in the rugged Rockies to become a member of the Boy Scouts of America, and remained there for a time as the guest of the organization. He is now enrolled as a Boy Scout in good standing of Region No. 8, which includes Colorado. At the suggestion of James E. West, executive director of the Boy Scouts, Mr. Davis spoke to the members of the conference in session there.

Mr. Davis praised the movement undertaken by the Boy Scouts to bring voters to the polls at local, state and national elections.

"You can do better work for the men and women of this day and for the men and women who are to come after us than to bring those boys to feel that that is their task in life, and that, young as they are, immature as they are, the hour for them to begin has already struck," Mr. Davis said.

The bank's Service Man went with him to his farm and after an examination decided that if the farmer had a half dozen cows and ten brood sows he would probably be able to use his pasture and intended corn crop to advantage. The bank finally loaned him $1,200 for this purpose and took a chattel mortgage on the stock purchased as its security. The bank admitted that ordinarily a loan should not be made like that, but the farm was close to town and the stock could readily be resold.

When the end of the year came around the exact records showed that the family had been well maintained and on half of the cream checks; the other half had been applied on his $660 note at the bank, covering the loan for the cows. Five days before the year was up the principal and interest on the note were entirely paid by crea mchecks. The pigs afforded a net gain of $1,400 after all expenses were paid.

In addition to this financial gain, the farmer was taught the value of a good cow and the necessity of keeping a record of his operations to know which farm operations are profitable. The Farm Service Department of the bank was able to teach this man things he had never dreamed about. It is worth the effort the banks would be called upon to make if each bank could but turn one broken, discouraged farmer into a prosperous one.—Banker-Farmer.

Life Budgets Proposed

Several colleges, looking to modern needs in the curriculum, have included in their new courses one for "life budgeting" which means not only training on how to budget and spend financial income, but also on budgeting time, including leisure, work, reading and other pursuits. This is felt necessary partly because organized labor is getting a gradual reduction in working hours, leaving more and more leisure, a great deal of which, it is said, is now wasted in a way that does as much physical harm as the surcease from too much work does good.

"HE'S A BEAST"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance.

"That scalpel—quick!" he cried.

Joan started and stretched out her hands toward the tray, which gleamed afar off, elusively through a black cloud.

"The one I handed you. Don't stare at me like a fool!"

Joan bent over the tray, putting out one hand to the table to support herself. She was conscious that everything was suspended and that everyone was watching her. In the interminable interval she heard the patient's gasping sighs, as if he was breathing the last wisps of life away.

She fingered the instruments in the tray feebly and nervelessly, and her hands seemed numbed and useless. Her fingers closed on something and brought it out. Then Lancaster's hand closed over hers, tore it away, and flung it back with a splash. Joan's hand dropped to her side, paralyzed by the painful pressure. The next instant Lancaster had the scalpel and whirled swiftly back toward the table, upsetting the bichloride, which lapped over the patient's feet.

The moments went by like hours. At last Joan became aware, through the sudden unraveling of the suspense, that the crux of the operation was over. Her head grew clear again. She saw the assistant surgeons unfastening the artery clamps. The head nurse rose to her feet, not looking at the patient. Joan realized that she was crying, and her strong, epicene face looked grotesque in grief. The orderly came up, and together they placed the patient on the stretcher. And suddenly Joan knew that the man was dead.

As the stretcher was wheeled out of the theater Lancaster turned toward his visitors.

"A very successful piece of work," he said. "It's a pity the poor fellow will never know how much I have done for him."

Joan felt the visiting surgeons' disgust at the execrable jest. Lancaster seemed to sense it, too.

"Unfortunately," he continued, "the best of surgeons is not proof against the stupidity of a nurse."

And he turned upon Joan fiercely. "What is your name?" he demanded.

"Miss Wentworth, Doctor Lancaster."

"Well, you're no use here. You're wasting your time. You've killed a man this morning," he bellowed. "If I can't have women about me with rational heads on their shoulders I'll get a gang of Chinese chop suey men. Get out and earn your living as a stenographer or saleslady. That's all your talents are fit for, Miss Wentworth!"

Joan looked at him in amazement. At his first words, at his tone, she had felt the shock of anger in her heart gather itself and leap to meet his own. But his rage frightened her, her head ached, and she was sick from the fumes which still penetrated the theater. She tried to answer him, but could not utter a word and broke into tears instead, sobbing in complete nervous abandonment.

Lancaster turned from her with a wry face. "Well, gentlemen," he said, with an affectation of jovialness, "better luck next time. I'm sorry the operation was not successful, but, after all, the patient's life is not the principal thing. The method was correct, you see, but I did not reckon on an incompetent assistant."

"Put the blame on the anesthetic, Doctor Lancaster," said a white-bearded surgeon, with chivalrous intent. "With a nephritis history operation's useless. Better let them die peacefully."

"I did not quite grasp the technical innovation you spoke of, Doctor Lancaster," said another. "To my mind it was the original Leonard operation, except that—"

"Why did you divide the arterial coats below the site of the aneurism?" queried a third.

Lancaster led them from the theater, expostulating and explaining. The dark-haired girl lingered with the sponges. The assistant surgeons had already gone hurriedly out. Joan put her tray away. She still was unable to control her sobs.

Suddenly Lancaster reappeared, furious after the cross-examination to which he had been subjected. He came straight toward Joan with a face of malice. Unconscious of her pitiful aspect as a child might have been, she raised her streaming face and looked at him.

"You had no right to speak to me like that, whatever I did," she said.

"Whatever you did? Whatever you failed to do! What do you think you are here for?" he stormed.

He glared at her, turned away, hesitated, and then came back.

"That's just the way with you women," he cried. "You lost that case for me. And now you are thinking about your dignity. You shouldn't have taken up a nurse's vocation. You women don't know what you can do and what you can't till you find yourselves in a post of responsibility, and then you fall down. What made you take up nursing, anyway? Thought our style of caps becoming, I suppose."

"I've done my best to qualify. I've never been blamed before."

"Well, you've made a big mistake," said Lancaster. "That's all. A—very—big—mistake," he added, emphasizing each word with a nod. "And my work and patients' lives are too important to allow mistakes to happen. You're too pretty to be a nurse, anyway," he added in a lower tone.

"You don't need to tell me that, Doctor Lancaster!" cried Joan furiously.

He made a gesture of mock despair.

"That's right, get on your high horse again!" he said. "Just remember that I'm at the head of the Southern hospital, and what I say goes, that's all."

He swung upon his heel and went out of the room, leaving her gripping the table fiercely in her humiliation. The dark-haired girl, who had been fussing in a corner, came up to her.

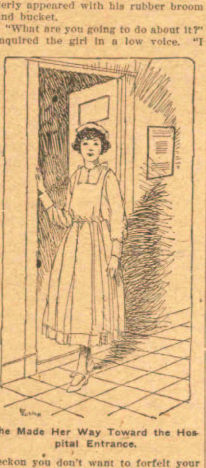
"He's a beast!" she exclaimed passionately. "He hates women—decent women. My! if he'd dared to speak that way to me I'd have told him what I thought of him, right in the middle of the operation. I don't care for anybody when my temper's up. I could tell you a few things I've heard about him if I were minded to. Do you know he went on a five years' spree once?"

"I don't care what he did!" cried Joan passionately.

"Well, I guess you could make it your business to know," answered the other. "A girl's got to fight her way, the same as a man. He threw up his job and just went away for five years, drinking and living with tramps, and then had the nerve to come back as if nothing had happened. I got it from a girl that used to be friendly with him. He's—"

She broke off abruptly as the orderly appeared with his rubber broom and bucket.

"What are you going to do about it?" inquired the girl in a low voice. "I reckon you don't want to forfeit your diploma any more than the rest of us. Listen! You go and see him."



She Made Her Way Toward the Hospital Entrance.

"Never!" said Joan.

"Don't be a fool, Miss Wentworth! You go and see him at his house. It's what anyone would do in your place. Fool him by making him think he can do what he likes with you; play with him and hold him off by hook or crook until you're graduated, and then laugh at him. I'd do it if I had to. My! if you heard some of the stories that are going round—"

The head nurse beckoned at the door. "The lady superintendent wants to see you at once, Miss Wentworth," she said. "You're to go right into her office."

She looked at Joan resentfully. Her face was quite composed again, but her eyes were reddened. She knew that Lancaster had been at fault, but she had seen Joan's blunder, too. Miss Symons was one of those women who can acquire the faculty of a man's strength without losing their own sex. She was a tower of strength toward weakness, but she had no pity for a lapse of duty.

Joan walked the dreary length of the corridor to the lady superintendent's room. The white-haired woman was seated at her desk, pretending to be making up her accounts and composing herself for the interview.

"Miss Wentworth!" she began, turning round in her chair as Joan appeared at the door. "You have made Doctor Lancaster very angry. He said you are totally inefficient. What was it that happened this morning?"

"The ether made me faint and I couldn't see the instruments for a moment, and Doctor Lancaster happened to want a scalpel quickly," answered Joan.

"Well, it's a great pity," said the other, "because it was your first day and we had to get somebody to take Miss Martin's place and I selected you because I relied on you particularly. Anyway, you are suspended."

Joan looked at her stupefied. "You mean—that—I am to leave the hospital and lose my diploma?" she asked.

"I don't know yet," answered the lady superintendent evasively. "I suppose Doctor Lancaster will decide that later after he has laid the matter before the board at their next meeting and looked over your record. Anyway, Miss Wentworth, you may as well take a holiday for a week or so until you hear from us."

She turned back to her books while Joan, after looking at her for a moment in silence, turned and went into the corridor. She made her way toward the hospital entrance. And the great wooden arch, through which she had passed hundreds of times without noticing it, suddenly became vivid with detail; the hospital, which had been a part of her unconscious life, looked strange and new to her.

Chapter II

Joan had a room in a nurses' boarding house a few minutes' walk away. She walked mechanically homeward, hardly even yet realizing the magnitude of the blow which had befallen her. Avonmouth lay almost deserted in the noontide glare. The shuttered houses, gay with striped awnings, looked down on the white, dusty streets. The little park that contained the Confederate monument was bright with geraniums, but the grass was parched and withered, and the feeble efforts of an automatic sprinkler seemed almost instantly absorbed by the thirsty ground.

Joan made her way toward an overhanging tree, brushed away a prickly caterpillar from a seat beneath it, and sat down. She was trying to estimate the magnitude of the catastrophe that had happened to her, to free herself from the stupefied wonder and passionate resentment that held her. Two hours before life had seemed reasonably bright; now its entire course was changed. For she did not doubt that the lady superintendent had been trying to soften the news of her dismissal.

Her mind ran back to the beginning of all things for her—her father's death. That had happened ten years before, and the mortgage on the estate, ruined after the war, had grown like a spreading sore, eating away field after field, until it allowed everything except nine hundred dollars. After the enforced sale, Mrs. Wentworth and her daughter had gone to Avonmouth for the sole reason that the mother remembered a wealthy godmother there, distantly related, whose activities she hoped to enlist on behalf of her daughter. It was characteristic of her that she should not have known the woman had died six years previously.

Still, Avonmouth was the nearest large town in which a girl, flung on the world untrained, might hope to support two people. Joan had long before wanted to be a nurse. She decided to attempt to enter a hospital; but now her mother's slow, mortal illness kept her nursing her at home. Six months after their arrival Mrs. Wentworth died. What remained of their nine hundred dollars after the doctor's and funeral expenses had been paid would suffice for Joan's merest needs until she had graduated from the Southern hospital. But the physician who attended Mrs. Wentworth in her last illness had secured the girl a position as a probationer, and Joan was as happy as she could expect to be. Since that date he had moved away, and Joan was altogether alone.

At home they had known hardly anyone, for the whole region was in that condition of resettlement that began in the seventies and is still proceeding. Their friends had scattered to the north and west; their letters had long since ceased. Prosperity, stalking through the nation, had left a little ridge of poverty between the swaths of its progress through the foothills of the back country. In Avonmouth Mrs. Wentworth's illness, and afterward, the hospital work, had kept the girl both from making friends and from the realization of her need of them. Her whole mind was set upon obtaining that diploma which would mean an assured living, and before her eyes was ever the spectacle of such poverty as she had known at home among others and had seen approaching her mother. After she graduated, perhaps, life might begin to unfold before her eyes. But even this she realized only vaguely; she lived altogether in the moment.

It's plain that Joan is a nice girl, but Dr. Lancaster seems to be no good, either as surgeon or man.

Cannibal Ancestors

The discovery of a pile of human bones dating from the Neolithic period—at least 6,000 years ago—in a cave near Auch, in the south of France, has given rise to the theory that prehistoric men at that period were undoubtedly cannibals. The bones all bear marks of teeth and apparently form the remains of some gigantic cannibal feast.

New Explanation for Disasters on Ocean

In explanation of collisions at sea it is said to be a scientific fact that a very large liner moving through shallow water will attract small craft toward her. This theory was first put forward when the White Star liner Olympic collided with the British destroyer Hawke, whose captain stated on oath that his vessel was sucked toward the big liner and refused to answer her helm at all. He was laughed at then, but not so long afterward the ill-fated Titanic started on her maiden voyage. As she steamed down Southampton docks the American liner New York, an eleven-thousand-ten ship, began to get uneasy at her berth alongside the quay. Presently her stout mooring ropes snapped, one after another, and she started to move out toward the White Star ship. The Titanic was immediately stopped, while tugs got hold of the New York and towed her back into safety. During the war there was another proof of the theory, this time by the Olympic again. A German submarine sidled up to her and was getting ready to torpedo her, when the suction drew the U-boat close up under the liner's stern, and the blades of her great propeller ripped open the submarine from stem to stern.

It's a Brute for Wear!

TWO thousand times for every mile you walk—your overshoes or boots are bent and wrinkled!

It's these strains—repeated day in and day out—that break the ordinary rubber overshoe or boot.

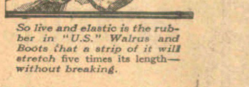
And that's why into every "U.S." Walrus and Boot is put live, elastic rubber.

If you cut off a strip of this rubber, you'd find it would stretch more than five times its length—without breaking—and snap back into shape every time like an elastic band.

Anchored in this live rubber are layer on layer of tough fabric reinforcements. They give rugged strength to "U.S." Walrus and Boots.

No wonder people all over the country are finding that "U.S." brand rubber footwear is a big economy—that it gives longer wear and better service.

"U.S." Overshoes and Boots wear longer because they're built to wear longer. It will pay you to ask for "U.S."



So live and elastic is the rubber in "U.S." Walrus and Boots that a strip of it will stretch five times its length—without breaking.

Other "U. S." Rubber Footwear

You'll find every kind of rubber footwear in the big "U.S." line. In addition to the "U.S." Walrus and "U.S." Boots, there's the "U.S." lace Bootee, an all-rubber work-shoe—and "U.S." Rubbers and Arctics for every member of the family. Look for the "U.S." Trademark whenever you buy—the honor mark of the largest rubber organization in the world.

Have Your Ascension Robes Ready

The Seventh Day Adventists are again chanting dolorously that the end of the world is near. They have got a new dispensation which tells them that all things earthly will disappear in a puff of white smoke on February 6th, 1925.

They aren't giving us much notice of our transfiguration this time but we'll have to stand it. My Lord My Lord! What can these boys be thinking of, to send us all into Eternity on this short notice! The road question in Lansing ain't threshed out and down on the farm Dad has not yet cut the summer's wood, and the bootleggers will never to able to confess and become converted in so short a time.

This paper does not wish to mix material things with religious matters, but we feel it a duty to suggest at this time that the Adventists may be right and if they are, we will be doing a favor to readers by making the suggestion that they pay up their bills here and elsewhere,

One of the first questions to be asked we are reliably informed, will be regarding the payment of bills. Of course no one will be sent to Hell for non-payment, but there will be a sort of detention ward or half way station where the delinquents will be detainrd; six months in arrears, six months out of Heaven.

And if perchance a subscriber is back a couple of years, it would be Dante's Inferno sure for him.

Even now we believe we can hear the demoniac shouts as long steep hills are coated with sand paper and the delinquent ones (sans clothes) are gently tobogganed down minus the toboggan. We merely mention this for your preservation.

I. O. O. F. HONORS MICHIGAN MAN

HERBERT A. THOMPSON, GRAND SIRE, FORMER PUBLISHER OF COUNTRY WEEKLY.

ADMISSION AGE NOW 18 YEARS

Great Strides Made in Odd Fellowship—Relief Work for Past Year Nearly $8,000,000.

At the recent session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, held in Jacksonville, Fla., Michigan was made the hub of Odd Fellowship, so to speak, when Herbert A. Thompson, editor and publisher of The American Odd Fellow at Williamston, was unanimously elected as Grand Sire, the highest rank and office in the world of Odd Fellowship.

As a mark of appreciation on behalf of the Order in Michigan, a banquet was tendered to the entire body and their ladies in attendance at the session in Jacksonville. It was the finale of a dynamic drive that had been started in 1914, when Mr Thompson first entered the Sovereign Grand Lodge as a representative of the Grand Lodge of Michigan, which he had served a year previously as Grand Master, making a record that stands out as a year of wonderful attainments.

HERBERT A. THOMPSON

Possibly there never was a session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge that so completely gave itself over to one grand jurisdiction as did the 1924 session to Michigan. In fact the dynamic force that had so completely won the Sovereign Grand Lodge over to the candidacy of Mr. Thompson for deputy Grand Sire at Detroit in 1922, was still felt on all sides at Jacksonville. Michigan was simply bubbling over with joy for the honors that had come to it, the first in the history of the Order, and the committee in charge of the affair "stepped on the gas" and set a pace that will be difficult for any future session to equal, which brought forth favorable comment in the press throughout the entire civilized world where Odd Fellowship exists.

In his new office Mr. Thompson has jurisdiction not only in the United States and Canada, but in Europe and all other countries where the Order has been established. He is the executive head of an organization numbering nearly 4,000,000.

WAS Dr. Lancaster a human fiend or a noble soul subjected to malign influences? Were two personalities locked within his body? Were his strange and contrasting characteristics the result of using a drug? Should pure and womanly Joan Wentworth have given her heart into the keeping of such a man? North Adams High on Accredited List

From Supt. R. C. Young we obtained the following communication written recently by the University Committee of Diploma Schools of Michigan:

"Mr. R. C. Young, Superintendent of Schools, North Adams
Mich.

My dear Sir:—At a meeting of the University Committee on Diploma Schools on Jan. 15, 1925, it was decided to continue your school on the accredited list of this University for the term of one year, ending June 30, 1926.

In re-crediting your school, the Committee desires to urge that serious consideration be given to the following recommendations.

First: that continued efforts be made to secure a more modern school building.

Second: that the teaching load of the superintendent be reduced in order that increased attention may be devoted to the supervision of instruction.

Third: that future vacancies in the high school staff be filled by the employment of sufficient college graduates to satisfy the requirements for accrediting for the term of two years.

It is the opinion of the Committee that attention to the foregoing recommendations will tend to strengthen your high school.

Very respectfully yours
J. B. Edmondson, Sec'y
University Com. Diploma Schools"

Rather gratifying news to Superintendent Young who has labored faithfully to keep up the standards of our schools. Our High school should stand at the head and we believe it does.

"There's a Week's Work of Fencing—Done in a Day"

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

AN OPERATION RECOMMENDED

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 14 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and had spells as if my heart was affected, and it helped me a lot. The doctors told me at one time that I would have to have an operation. I thought I would try 'Pinkham's,' as I call it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe 'Pinkham's' cured me. Every-one who saw me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, not but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sanative Wash and like it very much."—Mrs. E. GOULD, 4000 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised.

Then She Gave Him Up

"Why did you break off your engagement?" "Oh, my dear, Jack became simply impossible. He criticized the way I dressed and objected to my friends, and always wanted me at his beck and call. Then on top of all that he suddenly went off and married another girl, so I made up my mind to have nothing more to do with him."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Paris Agreement Worries a Few Senators—Japanese Recognition of Russia.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SATISFACTION over the work of the American representatives in the Paris conference on division of German reparations payments is not unmixed with apprehension, on the part of some Americans, that our country may have become thereby unduly "entangled" in the settlement of Europe's affairs. This despite the assurances of Secretary of State Hughes that participation in the Paris settlement has not obligated the United States in the least to join in enforced collection of reparations from Germany. Mr. Hughes said:

"The agreement reached at Paris was simply for the allocation of the payments made under the Dawes plan. It does not provide for sanctions or deal with any questions that might arise if the contemplated payments should not be made. With respect to any such contingency, the agreement at Paris puts the United States under no obligation, legally or morally, and the United States will be as free as it ever was to take any course of action it may think advisable."

This did not satisfy Senators Hiram Johnson, Borah and others, and at their instance the senate asked President Coolidge to transmit to it the full text of the agreement and a complete explanation of the circumstances attending its signature by the American representatives, particularly Ambassador Kellogg's reported futile attempt to sign with reservations absolving the United States from responsibility for any part of the arrangement except that pertaining to American claims.

MEMBERS of the senate foreign relations committee were entertained at dinner Wednesday by the President, and with them were Richard Washburn Child, former ambassador to Italy, and A. P. Moore, ambassador to Spain. The principal subject discussed was the treaty of Lausanne between Turkey and the United States, and there were indications that Mr. Coolidge would try to have it ratified before March 4. Chairman Borah, however, says there will not be time to settle both this and the world court matter, and the committee decided to take up the latter question at its next meeting.

Another topic of deep interest to the foreign relations committee, and indeed to the whole country, was the recognition of soviet Russia by Japan. Those two nations signed at midnight Tuesday a treaty of mutual diplomatic recognition. Japan promises to evacuate Saghalien early in the spring, but is granted a naval oil reserve on that island and is given the right to exploit half the known coal and oil fields there under a 50-year lease, paying royalty. The question of debts of the czarist government, trade, navigation and fishing agreement are to be settled later.

There was great rejoicing in Tokyo over this pact, and both the Japanese and the Russians predicted that the United States would soon have to recognize Russia. On this subject George Tchitcherin, soviet foreign minister, says the first step of Mr. Coolidge as the newly elected President, in international relations, "brings him face to face with the most obvious necessity of drawing the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics into the circle of his country's political relations. It is impossible permanently to preserve the artificial system of separation between the two biggest countries in the world, which was created by Secretary Hughes. The entry of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics into the circle of the Pacific brings it face to face with America in the same ocean. America will find itself in a cul-de-sac if that absurd estrangement from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is maintained."

BY AN amendment added to the navy appropriation bill by the senate the President is authorized and requested to call another international conference on the reduction of armament. Mr. Coolidge has said he wished to do this, but preferred to await the action of other nations on the disarmament conference proposed by the League of Nations, with which we would have nothing to do. This may have to be dropped, for opposition to the attending protocol as amended by demand of the Japanese has not abated. British dominions are so strongly against it that it is reported the British government has abandoned the plan of calling an imperial conference to consider it.

While considering the naval bill the senate rejected an amendment which would provide money for elevating the guns of 13 capital ships, thus sustaining the stand taken by the administration.

REPRESENTATIVE PORTER, head of the American delegation to the international opium conference which has resumed its sessions in Geneva, is rather hopeless of results, and his pessimism seems justified by the fight that is being made, especially by the British, against the American proposal for the suppression of opium smoking in the Far East within fifteen years. Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, head of the British delegation, says it would be impossible to inaugurate any fixed time limit, and in his remarks he asserted the American people were using more opium and narcotic drugs than the people of India. This was hotly resented by Mr. Porter, who declared the charge was a vile slander on the people of the United States. Viscount Cecil withdrew his statement and apologized. Most of the delegates to the conference support the American proposals, but, as Cecil says, international practice requires unanimity in parleys of this kind.

Dr. Alfred Sze, Chinese representative, created a sensation when he warned the so-called opium bloc powers that China now had awakened and that if the powers failed to subordinate their financial interests to ethical interests and did not cease to exploit the Chinese and the Far East they would be held responsible not only by the world as a whole, but, in particular, by 400,000,000 Chinese.

WHEN prosecution of the rum-running ring of New Jersey was begun recently it was declared that some men in high position were certain to be involved. Last week several prohibition agents testified that United States Senator Edward I. Edwards had accepted and held in escrow $3,800 which he was to have paid to William Griffin, one of the defendants, when Griffin delivered 100 cases of whisky. They said Griffin became suspicious and called the deal off and that Edwards returned the money. Griffin in his testimony admitted two of the agents left the money for him with Edwards, but denied that either he or the senator knew that a liquor deal was contemplated. The defense insisted that there was an attempt to "frame" the senator, but the prosecutor said the evidence against Edwards would be presented to the grand jury.

BY A vote of 40 to 30, the senate adopted the majority report of the committee on the Teapot Dome oil scandal in which Albert B. Fall and former Secretary of the Navy Denby are censured. All the Democrats, the insurgent Republicans and Shipstead of Minnesota voted for this report. All the negative voters were Republicans. During the debate Senator Reed of Missouri excoriated his colleague, Spencer; Senator Heflin assailed Denby, and Bruce of Maryland, also a Democrat, defended him; and Senator Walsh denounced Spencer's minority report as "a tissue of half-truth and of misrepresentation characterized by the most egregious partisan and political bias."

The Department of Justice is reassembling in Washington, for submission to a grand jury, the testimony in the case of Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, who was indicted in that state on a charge of arranging, in violation of restrictions resulting from his election, to receive a fee of $10,000 from Gordon Campbell, Montana oil man, for services in the leasing of public lands.

MRS. MIRIAM FERGUSON, second woman to become the governor of a state, was inaugurated as chief executive of Texas in the presence of an immense and jubilant throng. When she took up her official duties her husband, a former governor who was impeached and ousted, sat by her side, and it was apparent to the newspaper men that he would have a large share in the administration.

SENATOR MOSES' postal pay and rate increase bill, which is understood to have the approval of the administration, was up for consideration in the senate. It is designed as a temporary measure, granting pay raises for ten months beginning April 15. The rate increases provided for are estimated to bring about $60,000,000 annually, and the salary increases would be $68,000,000. The bill provides for a joint congressional committee to conduct hearings and formulate a permanent measure.

COMPLETION of the work of the federal railroad administration, which was created during the war, was announced by the President. The total cost to the people was $1,674,500,000, divided as follows: Loss to the government during period of federal control, $1,123,500,000; expenses of guaranty period, $536,000,000; amount required to reimburse small deficit lines, $15,000,000. The settlement with the railroads was of enormous magnitude and was effected without a lawsuit for nearly fifty millions, or a little more than 6 per cent of the revised claims submitted by the roads.

THE spectacle of a solar eclipse, total on a curved path from Minnesota to Montauk Point, L. I., was enjoyed by the people of the United States Saturday morning. Hundreds of astronomers were prepared to make observations if the day were clear, and hoped to discover some new facts about the sun. Whatever they learned will be told the public later.

CHANCELLOR LUTHER presented to the German reichstag the names of the new cabinet last week, and the Social Democrats and Communists promptly opened their attack on the government. Their spokesmen declared it represented the first step toward restoration of the monarchy, and the Nationalists responded with joyful cries of "Very true" and "God be thanked." The Catholic party members protested against this and were obviously disturbed. Herr Breitscheid of the Independent Socialists said monarchist students of all universities are being trained secretly for future army officers' commissions. This charge agrees with French and British charges in the report upon which the nonevacuation of Cologne is based. Chancellor Luther told the reichstag his government would support both the republic and the Dawes plan.

ABOUT 900 delegates, representing nine national women's organizations, held a conference in Washington to determine the cause and cure of war. Among the interesting personages to address them was Lord Thomson, who was secretary of state for air in the MacDonald cabinet. Himself a veteran of five wars, he spoke as an ardent pacifist, but gave the women sound advice against being too idealistic and dealing in abstractions.

"An out and out pacific attitude," Lord Thomson said, "does not help the cause along. In fact, I have known instances where it has done positive harm. Avoid abstractions in dealing with so enormous a question, for when we talk abstractions in dealing with a concrete subject we but lead ourselves into a maze of meaningless phrases. What we need is a happy combination of idealism and common sense, a combination, however, not to be effected by idealists, who only make phrases, nor yet by common sense people, who sometimes insist upon standing on their heads to prove that they are hard-headed. The thing most needed in the world today is some detached, disinterested influence working incessantly for peace."

OKLAHOMA has lined up with the states that oppose the child-labor amendment to the United States Constitution, in so far as the lower house of her legislature is concerned. The representatives voted 81 to 24 against ratification. A committee of the Texas state senate voted in favor of a concurrent resolution refusing to ratify the amendment. In Arizona, however, the house has ratified it and the senate is sure to follow suit, having voted that way unanimously in committee of the whole.

Good Growth Shown in Rubber Exports

Washington.—The total value of rubber goods exported from the United States during 1924 will approximate $40,000,000, as compared with $36,972,170 in 1923, according to a bulletin issued by the Department of Commerce. While this is in part due to higher prices for certain products it is largely a result of increased shipments of waterproof rubber footwear, rubber heels and rubber sundries and specialties of all kinds, which have moved abroad in increasing quantities during 1924.

Though the general trend of rubber goods exports during the last year has been upward, as compared to 1923, there are important classes of rubber products which were exported to a smaller extent in 1924 than in 1923. This is true of automobile tires, the chief product of the rubber industry. In 1922, 1,326,220 automobile casings were exported; in 1923, 1,362,741, and complete figures for 1924 will show the exports in that year to have totaled about 1,250,000. Another product in which the United States exports were less in 1924 than in 1923 is canvas rubber-soled footwear. One large American producer has used Canadian factories as a base for a larger share of their exports in 1924 than in 1923. If United States and Canadian exports of canvas rubber-soled footwear are combined the total for 1924 will be larger than for 1923, showing that American trade is holding its own in this product.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Senate Passes Two-Cent Gas Tax Bill With Only One "Nay" Vote

Lansing—The Senate has passed the Atwood-Baxter 2-cent gasoline tax bill, by a vote of 30 to 1, Senator Joseph Bahorski casting the only negative ballot. The measure has gone to the House where it must lay on the table five days before it can be acted upon.

An immediate effect clause and an amendment designating an appropriation as necessary to meet a deficiency in funds were added when the senate finally passed the measure.

The measure provides for a tax of two cents a gallon on motor fuel, the return of $2,500,000 to the counties annually to retire the $5,000,000 owed them on county rewards, payment of not less than $3,000,000 annually toward interest and sinking fund charges on highway bonds, $500,000 for non-trunk line bridges and the remainder to go toward new construction.

Weight Tax Bill Passes

The automobile weight tax bill, with a 55 cent per hundred rate for passenger cars and 65 cents to $1.25 graduated rate on commercial vehicles, has been passed by the house, transmitted to the senate and referred by that body to its taxation committee.

The weight tax bill did not slide through the house with the same speed that marked the passage of the gasoline tax measure in the senate.

Rural representatives were not altogether pleased with the bill as it finally came out of committee. There was objection to a belated reduction by the committee of its recommended maximum rate for commercial cars, from $1.50 to $1.25. There also were urgings from rural members for a larger county share of the receipts from the tax for local highway purposes. The present law gives the counties half of the total receipts for local highway purposes.

Seek Blue Sky Revision

The Michigan Securities Commission reorganization bill has been introduced by Representative Milton Palmer of Detroit. He announced that two other measures are in course of preparation. The measure that appeared would create a full time securities commission, consisting of three members at salaries of $7,500 each. It would replace the present commission which includes the state banking commissioner, the attorney general and H. M. Duff, who was elevated from executive secretary to the position of full time commissioner by the last legislature.

Trespassing Made Illegal

Entering an unoccupied house or factory without permission would be made punishable by a fine not to exceed $250 or 90 days imprisonment, or both, if a bill introduced by Senator Arthur E. Wood becomes law. Mr. Wood explained that Detroit contractors have reported heavy losses by builders of new houses through people entering and tracking over new varnished floors or doing other damage.

Hurries Re-apportionment

Senator Arthur I. Wood has asked that a meeting of the Senate Reapportionment committee be called as soon as possible. Senator Elizah Howarth, Jr., of Royal Oak, is chairman of the committee, and Mr. Wood is a member. The committee has before it Mr. Wood's bill providing for an increase in Wayne County's representation from five senators to 10.

To Increase Bond Limits

Rep. Fred R. Bristow, of Greenfield Township, has introduced a bill in the House to increase the bonding limits of rural and agricultural school districts having a population of more than 15,000 to 15 per cent of the assessed valuation of the district. The limit for districts having a population less than 15,000 is now 15 per cent, but for the more populous divisions, it drops to 8 per cent.

Capital Punishment Advocated

Fred C. McEachron, of Ottawa county, is the author of a bill to make the crime of first degree murder punishable by death. The bill in language is much like the capital punishment bills that appeared before the legislature in 1921 and 1923, and which were defeated by narrow margins. In 1921, only one vote blocked passage.

For Eight-Hour Day

Rep. John Holland, of Bessemer, long the champion of the eight-hour working day, introduced another bill in the House to provide that the employes of mines, quarries, mills and manufacturing plants shall not work more than eight hours in every 24.

Greater Detroit Planned

The Metropolitan area amendment to the constitution, which is designed to provide for the development of Greater Detroit, appeared in the senate in the form of a joint resolution, introduced by Senator George M. Condon of Detroit. The amendment provides that cities, townships, villages or parts thereof, may band together, issue bonds and carry out developments for parks, public utilities, sewage disposal, drainage, water, light, heat, power and transportation, and is to be submitted to the voters.

Moves to Save Waste Land

Inducements to owners of "cut-over" timber lands to retain their properties now under the burden of heavy taxes, and to prevent their return to the State which now holds over 1,000,000 acres of such lands, are contained in a bill now being completed by Senator William J. Pearson, of Boyne Falls, for early presentation in the Senate. He would have the state take over cut-over lands on a first lien bearing a portion of the taxation, eventually receiving payment by the sale of second growth timber.

Fead. In a written confession, Rudd said he lost his temper when the baby's cries awakened him late one night. He tried to quiet the child by rocking it, but was not successful. Then he put his hand over the infant's mouth, holding it there several minutes. Unintentionally he shut off the baby's breath and it died.

Johnson, pathologist of the state department of agriculture, who have announced that the poultry scourage has been found in the Detroit markets and that immediate steps are being taken by the department to prevent spread of the disease to the rural district. According to the authorities, the disease is believed to have come into the state from Canada or the east on infected fowls.

FARMER NOT AID IN ORGANIZATION OF THIRD PARTY

International Labor Unions Excluded From LaFollette Convention All Except Own Followers.

RADICALS IN POWER BAN SOIL TILLERS

Blacklist Includes Their Defenders in Congress.

LaFollette was entered in the race for President by an aggregation of national and international labor unions. The public, and particularly the farmer, had no voice whatever in his so-called nomination. There has existed for over three years an organization known as the Conference for Progressive Political Action, composed of 16 or 18 national and international labor unions, the majority of them railway labor organizations.

The officers of this Conference for Progressive Political Action are on the whole the national and international officers of the labor organizations composing the conference. The chairman or president of this conference is William Johnston, president of the International Machinists' union, and the director of the railroad strike in 1922. Mr. Johnston was recently candidate for governor of Rhode Island on the Socialist ticket. The headquarters of this conference is in the Machinists' building, Washington, D. C., a building owned by the International Machinists.

This conference held its annual meeting in St. Louis in February, 1924, adopted a platform, pledged itself to launch a third party, and adjourned to meet in Cleveland July 4 for that purpose. The convention in Cleveland on July 4 was therefore nothing but the adjourned meeting of the Conference for Progressive Political Action. The delegates to the Cleveland convention were merely delegates from the labor organizations comprising the Conference for Progressive Political Action, plus a few scattering delegates from the Socialist party and a few radical organizations such as the League for Industrial Democracy. The Conference for Progressive Political Action established its own rules regarding whom it would admit as delegates and these rules were so framed that no one not in hearty accord with the views of the labor organizations comprising the conference was admitted. Out of approximately 1,000 delegates, less than 25 were farmers or representatives of alleged farmer organizations.

The officers of the Conference for Political Action were the officers of the convention. William Johnston, Socialist leader, was the temporary and also the permanent chairman. After organizing the convention, a resolution was drawn up and sent to Senator LaFollette asking him to lead in a fight for a third party. Not a single farmer or representative of a bona fide farmer organization signed this petition.

The so-called platform adopted at this convention offers absolutely nothing to the farmer. It consisted practically altogether of a recital of the alleged grievances of organized labor and a demand for the enactment of their legislative program. Not a farmer was a member of any of the committees of this convention, neither the committee on resolutions nor credentials, nor organization, nor nominations. The chairman of each of these committees was an official of some international labor organization. The personnel of these committees were either officials high in international railway labor organizations or officials high in the Socialist party, and other radical organizations.

The convention went on record in behalf of the candidacy of LaFollette. LaFollette was officially notified of his nomination by a committee appointed by Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor and no member of this committee was a farmer. LaFollette acknowledged his nomination in the form of a letter addressed not to the people of the United States or the farmers of the United States, but to the American Federation of Labor.

The campaign committee handling the LaFollette-Wheeler movement is the National Committee of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, plus a number of Socialists. The addition of Socialists to this committee was demanded by the Socialist party as the price of their support of the ticket. This demand was made at a meeting of the committee held in Washington July 21, at which time representatives of the Socialist party were present and insisted that they be given 10 per cent of the committee. Their demand was granted. There is an executive committee of 10 handling the inside stuff of the La Follette-Wheeler campaign. No farmer is on this committee. The campaign headquarters of the LaFollette-Wheeler movement is 408 Machinists building, Washington, D. C.

The Conference for Progressive Political Action issues a weekly publication known as Labor. The farmer has no part in it. It is managed and edited wholly by representatives of labor organizations. It is their official campaign publication.

MILLIONS IDLE NOW

Steady Increase in Unemployment Reported by Department of Labor.

Washington, D. C.—In a recent statement given to the press, Chairman Butler of the Republican National Committee says that every nation engaged in the World War has had to wrestle with the problem of post-war unemployment, that the other nations are still in the problem's throes, and that "the Republican administration of the United States alone has solved the issue."

The Department of Labor, with a Republican Secretary in charge, in an industrial survey made public in August, presents some interesting figures Mr. Butler ought to study.

With 1923 employment as 100, the index figure, Secretary Davis' Labor Department shows that employment was greater in 1917 than it has been at any time covered by its survey, and stood then at 115. It is estimated that there are 20.000,000 workers, skilled and unskilled, organized and unorganized, in the country, exclusive of farm labor. With employment at its peak in 1917, the 20,000,000 workers were all employed.

In 1919, the first post-war year, under a Democratic administration, the index figure of employment stood at 108.4, or 6.6 points under 1917, so that the number of unemployed was about 1,100,000.

In 1920, the last Democratic year, the index figure stood at 109.8, so that of the 20,000,000 workers, about 865,000 were unemployed.

For 1921—the Harding-Coolidge administration began in March of that year—the index figure stood at 85.3, and 5,100,000 of the 20,000,000 workers were idle.

The Lincoln Contest

At other times in this paper we have mentioned the Illinois Watch Company's donation to the intellectual uplift of our public schools in the shape of a beautiful Lincoln Medal to be given as a prize for the best written essay on Abe Lincoln. On display in Payne and Green's store will be seen the medal this season and it is well worthy of a heavy effort on the part of all students of our schools.

The subject so old yet so new, is hashed up and rejuvenated year after year and seemingly never gets stale. There are constantly coming to light new ideas concerning Lincoln and many new stories concerning his private life are told but whether they are a product of some enterprising editor's brainstorm we do not know; suffice it to say they are always welcome to our younger generation in search of knowledge on biography.

We have just read some excerpts on the nomination of Abe Lincoln in the Republican convention and we must say it throws an entirely new light on his political aspirations. Some of the speeches made in that convention which nominated Lincoln are enthusiastic models of rhetoric and scholarly to the last degree. The great newspaper man Horace Greeley who was then known as the political wise man is quoted as being extremely skeptical concerning Mr. Lincoln's ability to manage the fractious horse of our national affairs and he warned politicians to go slow in putting to the fore an untried man like this "rail splitter" in view of the fact there were so many veterans in the race. We are of the opinion that Abraham Lincoln was a destined man from the start and we also believe his course was mapped by the fates as surely as night follows day. He has many times been compared to George Washington—but any such comparison is a farce purely in every sense but one and that is his uniqueness. Washington came of aristocratic parentage, was well educated; belonged to the nobility so to speak never knew what hardship was until he became surveyor in the western wilds. Was always in the class of high social creatures while Lincoln on the contrary came from miserable surroundings was born to trouble and hardship and experienced the awful calamity of losing a devoted mother in his babyhood. Lincoln grew up in the lowest strata of human society—simple rough backwoods people—learned by bitterest experience the rough ends of life, had to fight for sustenance, and suffered from rigors of climate, inadequate clothing and ignorance, his only education being gleaned from the most commonplace books borrowed, and no instructors. Washington was educated in private schools and generally pampered in the home of rich Virginia planters, grew up to believe his family was of the elect and if we may believe history was not one jot or tittle behind the aristocrats of his neighborhood in impudence or proud demeanor toward those less fortunate in life.

Such is the wide gap between these two men which some addle pates are pleased to call similar. Yet in the end when their life work was finished there was not a penny worth difference between these two great figures of American history.

The "Onsted Outline" states in its columns of January 23rd that the school board of Clarksville High School has issued an order against public dances in the village and goes on record to oppose such functions in the future The board quoths as follows: "We take this opportunity to advise parents of pupils of the Clarksville school that we are not responsible for parties or dances attended by the pupils. We also go on record to the effect that we do not favor school children or any member of the teaching force attending public dances. The only parties we take any responsibility for are class parties properly chaperoned by class advisor from our school faculty, at which no dancing will be permitted. Not so long ago the Hanover school board owing to numerous abuses growing out thereof, took the same stand and warned all pupils and their parents that they could not guarantee good results from these public dances, and especially forbade pupils to hold such dances on their own account. What the surrounding small town school boards are doing and intend to do we have not yet learned. It all depends upon the complexion of the parents and the early training of said school boards Up at Lansing the legislators must have smelled something for they are about to introduce a bill to forbid public dancing on Sunday in Michigan which law if it becomes operative, will put out a number of summer resorts in this vicinity, and it is too bad the matter wasn't adjusted ten years ago, when we come to think of the wholesale spoilings which have come out of this form of amusement

Three Years Ago

Onsted—had no newspaper—today you have one of the best and largest, published in a town of its size or even three or four times larger—and we were just silently wondering if there are not quite a few who ought to appreciate this fact—more than they do.—Onsted Outline.

A Clear View

A newspaper item states that the Royal Observatory is to be removed from Greenwich, England, where it has stood for nearly two hundred and fifty years. Greenwich is on the River Thames, five miles below London Bridge, and the Observatory was located there to escape from the smoke of the great city, on the advice of Sir Christopher Wren. But now London has grown so near that its sooty air affects the observers' vision of the heavens, and the all important telescopes must be removed to a more distant place.

We well remember a visit to this famous and lovely park some years ago. We found it very large 174 acres in extent, and too beautiful to describe. On the side wall of the observatory is the huge vertical dial of a twenty-four-hour clock, which gives the standard time of world. We were conscious of peculiar emotions as we gazed at this. If there is any "end of the world" it is at the meridian of Greenwich. For here begins the count of longitude, as made by the British; and as they are a nation of sailors their longitude prevails throughout the world, though it is not exclusive. But on most of the maps of the world all places are located by so many degrees east or west of Greenwich, and this makes the famous old observatory the geographical capital of the world. Of course, its telescopes must have every advantage of location for the sake of the clear vision upon which so much depends.

The utmost care is necessarily taken for the location of all telescopes. From the streets of San Jose, in California, can be seen the shining dome of the great Lick Observatory, on the distant summit of Mount Hamilton. On the top of Mount Whitney, in southern California, is located the largest telescope in the world. The Yerkes telescope is set far to the north of Chicago on a hill rising above the blue waters of Geneva Lake, Wisconsin. They who search the heavens must avoid all the smoke and murk of the earth. The faint shining stars, at their unspeakable distances, must have the purest air for the transmission of their tremulous rays.

Michigan Boasts 9,000 Lady Farmers

Michigan boasts 9,000 lady farmers, according to data analyzed by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute Of this number over 6,000 operate farms, 5,500 their own, 20 as managers and not quite 250 as tenants, the data disclosed.

Dairying, poultry and hog raising are some of the branches of agriculture in which the women farmers of the state specialize, the analysis revealed. The land under cultivation by the feminine agriculturists is close to 440,000 acres of which 285,000 acres are improved. The value of these farms is 32 million dollars. The figures further revealed that women cultivate 2.9 percent of all farms in the state and 2.3 percent of the total acreage the value being 2.3 percent of the whole. The average value of the land and buildings on farms operated by women was found to be in excess of 5,600.

Commenting on the large percentage of women who go in for dairying and poultry raising, the Institute sees a peculiar adaptation of these occupations to the feminine nature. From early times, it says, the average farm woman has had to care for the milk and act as dairymaid, too. And milking cows and selling butterfat with its requirements of close attention to details seems to be a type of work that woman naturally takes to. The same appears to hold true for poultry raising. For pin money for the thousand and one items needed in the home, the sale of eggs and poultry and cream has ever been known as a sure means. Many a woman in need of more money has almost instinctively turned to milking cows and keeping hens.

Speaking of the generous laws passed to relieve disabled veterans, the President said that more than 71,000 have been rehabilitated, 38,000 of whom are earning more than they did before the war. Compensation is being paid at the rate of about $100,000,000 a year, soon to be increased by $30,000,000 more, $40,000,000 have been provided for hospital facilities, which are open to veterans of all American wars.

"No government," the President declared, "ever provided so generously for those disabled by service in time of war."

Touching the exclusion law and restricted immigration generally, the President said: "Restricted immigration is not an offensive but a purely defensive action. It is not adopted in criticism of others in the slightest degree, but solely for the purpose of protecting ourselves. We cast no aspersions on any race or creed, but we must remember that every object of our institutions of society and government will fail unless America be kept American."

Next the President dealt with the tariff. "By means of a protective tariff," he said, "we have saved American agriculture, labor, and industry from the menace of having their great home market destroyed through the dumping upon it of a flood of foreign products. Under this wise policy we saw an economic revival, and our people as a whole, in marked distinction from the sufferers from the financial distress and depression of other lands, have come into an era of prosperity and plenty. As a source of revenue the tariff surpassed all expectations in producing an annual return of the unprecedented sum of about $550,000,000. A fiscal policy which places a large and much needed revenue in the public treasury, while stimulating business to a condition of abounding prosperity, defends itself against any criticism. Its merits are demonstrated by its results. We have protected our own inhabitants from the economic disaster of an invasion of too many foreign people or too much foreign merchandise."

The Washington Conference.

Next the acceptance speech dealt with the Washington conference whereby an end was put to the ruinous competitive naval armaments of world powers, the importance of which has never been fully realized by the people in general, Mr. Coolidge declared.

Turning to the "honest government" issue, President Coolidge pointed out bluntly that in all his studies of political history he could not recall an adminisration which was desirous of a dishonest government that, to check extravagance, introduced a budget system, cut taxes, purged pay rolls, made enormous reductions in the public debt and laid firmer foundations for the peace of the world.

President Coolidge declared he favored the system of private American enterprise and was opposed to the extension of government ownership and control; that he believed in economy in public expenditures and the practical application of the tehory; that he believed in tax reduction and tax reform; that he favored protection.

Favors Permanent Court.

"I favor the permanent court and further limitation of armaments," the President said. "I am opposed to aggressive war. I shall avoid involving ourselves in the political controversies of Europe, but I shall do what I can to encourage American citizens and resources to assist in restoring Europe, with the sympathetic support of our government. I want agriculture and industry on a sound basis of prosperity and equality. I shall continue to strive for the economic, moral and spiritual welfare of my country. American citizens will decide in the coming election whether these principles shall have their approval and support.

"The domestic affairs of our country appear to me to be by far the chief concern. From this source comes our strength. The home market consumes nearly all our production. Within our own boundaries will be determined to a very large degree the economic welfare and the moral worth of the American people. These are plain facts, but there are others equally plain."

Reaffirming his opposition to entrance into the League of Nations as a surrender of independence, the Presidena favored becoming a member of the permanent Court of International Justice, "as peace means fundamentally a reign of law." Entrance into the so-called World court "would do much to indicate our determination to restrain the rule of force and solidify and sustain the rule of reason among nations," Mr. Coolidge said.

America Helps Europe.

The President reviewed the difficulties of Europe and the unavailing efforts to find a way out until the American plan, proposed in 1922, was finally adopted, under which the reparations commission appointed a committee of experts, whose three American members included Gen. Charles G. Dawes, the President's running mate on the Republican ticket. The appointment of General Dawes as chairman and the report which has met world-wide approbation were pointed out.

When the reparations plan is in operation, the President said, he would consider it time to approach the great powers with the proposal for another conference to limit armaments still further and devise plans for the codification of international law.

"I trust that never again will the women of this nation be called on to sacrifice their loved ones to the terrible scourge of war," President Coolidge said.

Touching Latin America, the President said that we have constantly striven to come to more complete un-

Big Republicans Out For Davis

President Garfield's Son Among Prominent Men and Women Who Pledge Their Support and Votes To Democratic Candidate.

Washington, October.—That there is a steady and unmistakable drift of the independent vote to John W. Davis for President is clearly indicated by the large number of prominent men and women, independents and independent Republicans, many of whom supported Harding and Coolidge in 1920, who have come out publicly for the Democratic nominee.

These prominent Americans, who are not bound by party bonds and who in each election give their support to the man they believe to be, under the particular circumstances of the particular campaign, the best man for the Presidency.

This year, these independents make it clear that they are giving their support to Mr. Davis, not only because of the unsatisfactory record of the present administration, but because by training and by equipment the Democratic candidate is by far the best qualified man to manage the affairs of the government during the next four years.

Included in the list of independents who have announced their support of Mr. Davis, and publicly given their reasons for so doing, are men and women who are known to all Americans, and all of them are intellectual leaders and prominent in their professions. The list includes: besides Dr. Harry Garfield, son of a Republican president, the following:

Dr. Chas. W. Elliott, president-emeritus of Harvard University; Dr. Charles Grier Hibben, President of Princeton; Dr. Charles W. Dabney, President of the University of Cincinnati; Ida M. Tarbell, noted writer; Dr. Henry Van Dyke, writer and former minister to Holland; Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, former President of the National Federation of Women's Clubs; Dr. Irving Fisher, professor of economics at Yale, a Republican; Miss Nancy M. Schoonmaker, nationally known author and lecturer; Miss Virginia C. Gildersleeve, dean of Barnard College for Women; Hamilton Holt, former editor of Independent; Mrs. Laetitia McDonald Irwin, writer and wife of Wallace Irwin, also a famous writer; Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, wife of the artist and editor of "Life"; Theodore Marburg, another writer and American Minister to Belgium under President Taft's administration; Matthew Hale, former chairman of the progressive or "Bull Moose" party, and one of the leaders in the independent movement headed by Colonel Roosevelt; Judge N. Walter Dixon, of Denver, and others, while accessions to the list are being noted daily.

Supported Harding In 1920

Included in the list are two of the thirty-one independents and Republican pro-leaguers who in 1920 signed the famous appeal to independent voters of the country to support Harding and Coolidge as the best course to bring the United States into an association of nations and for the promotion of world peace. They were Dr. Gibben and Dr. Dabney, of Princeton and Cincinnati universities, respectively. The disappointment of signers of that appeal at the course the present administration has pursued is reflected in the statement of Dr. Dabney in announcing that he is now supporting Mr. Davis. Dr. Dabney declares that under the Harding-Coolidge administration, "cowardly and selfish counsels have prevailed;" the "administration, has fumbled with the worl[illegible] court question," and that "the same lack of courage and of leadership has unfortunately characterized the administration's handling of our national business."

Dr. Dabney concluded his statement by asserting that "the appointment of Fall, Daugherty and Forbes and the hesitating manner in which their cases have been handled are among the ugliest scandals in our history," and that "for the good of the world as well as for the good of America, we must overthrow this Republican oligarchy and elect a man to the Presidency who can lead." He expresses the conviction that "Mr. Davis has the ability to be a real leader and the courage to carry out his pledges."

FARMERS' UNION HEAD DEMANDS TARIFF CUT

Lincoln, Neb., October.—Demand for downward revision of the Republican tariff was made by President Osborn of the Nebraska Farmers' Union in the course of a speech he delivered to about 1,000 men and women at a picnic at Smartville, Nebraska, a few days ago. Practically all of his hearers were persons engaged in farming. They applauded his statement.

The repeal of the Fordney-McCumber law and the substitution of a lower tariff, Mr. Osbo[illegible] said, was the only way to impr[illegible] relations between the Un[illegible] foreign countries an[illegible] farmer to sell his s[illegible] abroad.

DRINKING AND THE SCHOOLS

Of course, this is talking some. I didn't start out dry. Mighty few drys did. I'll agree that bootleggers are hypocrites, where they used to be licensed saloon-keepers, and their patrons are hypocrites where they used to be merely ordinary drunks.

I am not so poor a reporter that I couldn't make out a case for the wets, for lack of law enforcement, for school children hitting liquor. When I was a reporter fifteen years ago we had fraternities going to booze. In one school attic two bushels of half pint whiskey bottles were found. Schools were, on the average. shot through in booze towns with drunken pupil streaks. you can't find one, now, where You could find twenty fifteen years ago. I've inquired about this. And I found enough to fill a page with the booze scandal and other scandals in the high schools, in society "among people who ought not to drink." But I've a sense of proportion. I can balance fifteen years ago against current conditions from my own personal experience in observation. My experience includes more than thirty states of the Union

SIX MILES OF SALOONS

I covered Bellevue Hospital, Gouverneur Hospitals and Hudson St. Hospitals in New York. I know what conditions used to be—when the saloons of New York were enough, if placed in double row, I think, side by side, to reach from the Battery to above the Haarlem, via Third Avenue. Six miles, was it? Thousands of them. Each one had to take in $20,000 annually to get by. Hundreds of millions of dollars. It is a physical impossibility to manufacture one tenth of the bulk of the liquor formerly supplied New York alone, by the breweries. You remember the hundreds upon hundreds of brewery trucks needed to transport the liquor. Do you really believe moon shine stills could make up the supply from Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, and other distilleries under the government licensing system? All the moonshine stills in the country today running full tilt couldn't turn out 10 percent of the bulk of the licensed stills. In Europe the whole industry is failing, for lack of Amercan market.

I can take you to towns and prove that English isn't the language of the United States. I can take you to certain places and prove that American women are immoral. I can take you to certain restaurants, show you a certain college president, point out sundry loose-living people and prove that the United States is rum soaked, wet, booze-fighting, all that stuff.

But I'll tell you this, that if I did any of those things I wouldn't be worth a whoop as a newspaper man, as a writer, as a gatherer of facts. I know all about the game of proving a whole lot by a little bit. You can't prove a thing squarely, with regard to the United States, without taking a cross section from ocean to ocean, and from border to border—and I've done both, on this liquor question. You can ignore millions while picking and choosing among a lot of yappers who claim to be "the people"

But prohibition has driven liquor from Main Street; it has taken it from the best business corners of the country; it has made a criminal of the bootlegger, and it has showed up the booze-fighters for what they are—poor, weak, sick men who need a man's pity, precisely as dope fiends do.

The best people aren't drinking. A few excuse their drinking by saying prohibition drove them to it. I don't know a man who drinks now who wouldn't have drunk far more if we didn't have prohibition. The brag of wets that prohibition makes drunks is all poppycock. I know dozens who quit drinking. I can show you a town where thousands quit drinking, men and women, when liquor was taken from under the noses of all the high school children and put into bootlegs.

By hand-picking conditions, you can prove anything about the United States. I can make, probably a better case for liquor than any man you know. I can names places localities, conditions—but what kind of a reporter would I be if picking these several localities, I ignored the vast areas where prohibition, even under crooked enforcement, has cleaned the streets of saloons and put a complete end to drunkenness?

I count not only the places where liquor is, but where it isn't that I know it used to be—which the wet don't.

All the increase in bootleg production wouldn't make a week's run of the license distilleries, the huge breweries of St. Louis, Milwaukee, New York, the open liquor producers—of 1912.

Just read the old U. S. Treasury reports on liquor production, the hundreds of millions of gallons consumed by American liquor drinkers. Compare the bulk with the bulk of bootleg. Can't you see that the old whiskey railroad tank cars, the beer special trains, the wine ship loads are gone? In place of liquor ships, 10. 000 and 20,000 ton steamers, we have a few hundred ton, perhaps 300 ton liquor runners. We have a string of four or five automobile loads where we formerly had whole train loads. The million tons or so of grain used in licensed liquor production—I doubt if there is one percent the production now, that there was before prohibition,

Herrin Massacre Recalled

The city of Herrin, Illinois, is again in the limelight and four lives were snuffed out by the factional fight which still goes on over there—under cover it is true—but nevertheless deadly.

Of all the disgraceful criminal doings in this country there is nothing which seems much worse or is more notorious than the proceedings at Herrin where men were lined up like cattle beside a wire fence and mercilessly shot down in their tracks because they had taken the places of striking miners.

The pitiful aspect of the case is the fact that K. K. K. influence is badly tangled in it, and it is reported that Glenn Young, one of the dead, was a Klansman. This notorious bootlegger whose wife died not long ago from wounds received at the hands of the opposing faction, has paid the penalty also by being shot to death.

The sheriff of the county, Ora Thomas, was slaughtered with two other men in the business center of Herrin. It is high time the United States government went down there with a regiment of soldiers and took possession of the theatre comedy-drama. Herrin should never be left to its own government: it is far too unfit. If the murdering and outlawry continues it will make ridicule stock for the world.

The anarchistic condition of the populace of this town is such that even the date and place of holding the coroner's inquest must be kept secret. Any organization or community that laughs at law plunges rough shod over all lines of decency and civilization, and ought to be snuffed out and driven from the earth. The real meaning of anarchy is treason to the nation and as traitors are punished, so should the horrible, murdering, conscienceless bunch at Herrin be dealt with.

Any city or town which dares to defy the laws of the land should be obliterated. Let the United Statees government buy the property of citizens there, force them to vacate and raze every building to the ground. Let the wild quail and jack-rabbit be its sole inhabitants. Plow it up and plant corn and wheat Away with it!

We hear sotto voces remarking "How inconsistent." Well, turn to the history of old Rome, once the proudest and grandest on earth. She became a rotten shell, a mass of corruption and intrigue. Today all that remains are a few disjointed fragments, which men ridicule and tread on as salt of the earth.

Great enthusiasm has been expressed in Association circles here concerning the outcome of the first radio Y. M. C. A. convention which was held Friday evening from Radio Station W. L. S. in Chicago. Hillsdale County was one of the sixty organized groups in eight states who actively participated in the Radio meeting. Albert F. Roberts of New York, senior secretary for the Town and Country department of the National Y. M. C. A. delivers the principal address of the novel convention, which was sponsored jointly by the DuPage County. (Illinois) organizatior and the W. L. S. Station. Mr. Roberts is coming to Chicago especially for the occasion.

Steam for the Drilling

In one small valley in California can be found hot water geysers spouting from the surface in various places. In spots the ground is so hot nobody can walk barefooted over it. We have previously mentioned this in the Advocate and it is now a reality that steam engines are being run by volcanic steam. In Alexandria valley not very far from the volcano, Lassan, this matter has been thoroughly investigated. People were incredulous in the extreme about these drillings in the solid rock, in fact the man who first promoted steam wells was ridiculed, until he at last found the subterranean boilers and tapped a 1,000 horse power flow of live steam heated to high temperature. He found many difficulties in his way and labored faithfully in the face of all slurs and criticism for some time and finally has as a reward two cased wells 7½ inches tn diameter which throw a column of super-heated steam 75 feet in air and when capped the guage shows a pressure of 68 pounds to the square inch, which is amply sufficient ts run a 25 horse power engine.

Capitalists are looking into the matter and things promise erelong to develop by which this power can be utilized to generate an eletric current for many of the towns and cities of Southern California and for any other power purposes whatever. The joke of it all, is to think that while investors have literally wasted millions on worthless mining stocks. they cannot at present see the wonderful possibilities of a ready-made steam plant locked up in the bowels of the earth which needs only to be tapped by the drill and piped to the engine. Until two years ago not one effort had ever been made to use this live steam. Think of it! Five hundred pipes of eight inch diameter spouting super-heated steam at 68 pounds pressure all going to waste for thousands of years. How slow after all, is human perception!

Auto License Law in Effect

We presume the new license law will be in effect by the time this paper is out. The law provides that passenger cars will pay 55 cents per hundred weight and trucks graduated from $1.25 per hundred weight down according to the size. The gas you burn will now cost two cents per gallon more than it did, and if the Standard Oil people see fit to raise the price where it was at one time the most of us will simply have to go back to "Old Dobbin" and stay with him. Secretary of State Deland states he will be all ready to give you your plates February 2nd and it is likely there will be a heavy rush for them after that date, as the matter has been held up so long.

Tractor Tricks To Yield To Science

Tractor tricks which try the patience of Michigan farmers will give way before science in a special four weeks truck and tractor course starting on March 9.

"The time and labor saying ability of the tractor and gas engine is undisputed", says Ralph W Tenny, director of the college short courses, "but everything must be kept working well, and the breakage expense must be kept down. The special truck and tractor school are designed to assist owners and operators in keeping down this expense,"

Practical work on all common types of gas engines and gasoline powered farm machinery is given during the courses. They are open to anyone in the state over 16 years of age.

LA FOLLETTE AMERICA'S GREATEST STATESMAN

By W. T. RAWLEIGH
President The W. T. Rawleigh Company, Freeport, Ill.

I have known Senator LaFollette ever since I was a boy on the farm. I am thoroughly familiar with his record as congressman, as governor for six years, and as United States senator for over 18 years.

W. T. Rawleigh.

During his 40 years of faithful public service Mr. LaFollette has not only obtained a more comprehensive and practical knowledge of our great economic and political problems, but he has unquestionably done more to secure and maintain true democracy and to make government more representative and responsive to the will of the people than any other statesman of this generation.

Senator LaFollette possesses every necessary qualification to make him one of the greatest and most satisfactory Presidents the people of the United States have ever had. His sympathies are similar to Lincoln's. He loves the common people and his most earnest desire is to be of real service to all classes of society. He is the soul of honor. He personifies the highest type of American citizenship. He has high ideals, is interested in the progress and advancement of all mankind, and has devoted his entire life to curbing selfishness, correcting the evils of government and trying to make the United States especially, and the world generally, a better place to live in.

He has a nation-wide reputation for absolute honesty. His record is clean, constructive and progressive from beginning to end. His long experience, sincerity of purpose, keen analytical mind, sound judgment, strict adherence to correct principles, great constructive genius, never-failing courage and comprehensive knowledge of our domestic problems and international relations unquestionably makes him the best qualified man for the safe, equitable administration of the nation's business.

HONESTY BRINGS YOUNG BOB FIRST MONEY EARNED

The first money Senator LaFollette earned be obtained through an act of honesty. The senator told the story, incidentally while visiting with some of his friends recently in Madison.

"Wherever I go in the Northwest I find old friends. I have hardly ever spoken in Minnesota, Iowa or the Dakotas without having some one come up to me afterward and say he or she was from Dane county, Wisconsin. Once, when I was governor of Wisconsin, I made a speech in Peach Creek Valley, N. D., and when it was over an old man came up to me and said he was Olof Osmondson, who used to live in Primrose, and asked me if I remembered the time when he gave me a quarter.

"The story was this:

"When I was a boy about five years old I attended a school where the Rockhill cheese factory now stands. One evening, while coming home with my sister, Josie, I found a pocketbook lying in the road right in the track made by the wheels. I took it home and gave it to my mother. The next day when we were going home from school, as we came around a clump of bushes at the turn we suddenly met a man with a beard who stopped us and asked: 'Did either of you children find a pocketbook?' I was startled and got behind my sister, who was a little older than I was, and gave her dress a pull to make her go along. I was afraid, and felt I had done something wrong in picking up the pocketbook.

"'I think this is the little boy that found it,' he said. 'Because I just got it from your mother and here is a quarter for you.' That quarter, I think, is still in possession of the family. On important occasions I would bring it out and show it to visitors. This North Dakota farmer was the same one that had stopped us in the road many years before, and needless to say, I remembered him and the incident too."

Your doctor advises internal cleanliness

HE WILL tell you that the first results of constipation — headache, sleepless nights, biliousness, backache, etc.—warn that the body is flooded with intestinal poisons. In time these poisons may cause the breakdown of health and lead to serious disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. For sale by all druggists.

> SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse.

In the town of forty thousand inhabitants Joan was as isolated as she had been in the latter years at home. Her life was as unsophisticated and as simple, and she was so unacquainted with the conditions and circumstances of existence that her dismissal seemed to her an irreparable disaster. She had won good opinions, she had been praised, and it seemed monstrous that her faintness at a critical moment should have ruined her whole life prospects. What made the tragedy the less tolerable was the admixture of the farcical. There was a simple and absurd explanation. Mrs. Webb's colored cook, Amanda, had quarreled with her mistress that morning, and Joan had had to go to the hospital without her breakfast.

She got up and walked slowly homeward without having resolved her problem. Inside the boarding house the air was like a furnace, and the smell of cooking was triumphant and dominant.

Inside the kitchen, seen through the open door, was Amanda, the cook, and Mrs. Webb, the landlady.

"Here's Amanda again!" Mrs. Webb called to Joan. "My dear, the idea of your running away without your breakfast this morning! Now you sit right down and have your lunch, Miss Wentworth!"

Joan was not hungry, but it was impossible to oppose the resolute insistence of Mrs. Webb, backed by the penitent cook, whose black face, as she flitted from the kitchen to the dining room, radiated remorse and good intentions.

"One can't get along without the proper food at the proper times,' said Mrs. Webb as she set down the dishes before Joan. "But I call it real sensible of you to have come home early. Some girls wouldn't have thought of that."

Joan choked suddenly, and Mrs. Webb perceived her distress. She bent over her and placed a kitchen-roughened hand upon her shoulder.

"My dear, what is it? What is the matter? Something gone wrong at that old hospital?" she asked. "Tell me now, honey!"

"It isn't anything, Mrs. Webb," said Joan, striving valiantly to keep back her tears. "Well, then, I'm—I'm discharged."

Mrs. Webb withdrew her hand and placed it upon one hip, bringing the other into corresponding position. She glared at Joan, as the convenient focus of her indignation.

"I never heard of such a thing!" she cried. "Who's dared to discharge you, Miss Wentworth? Why, it was only yesterday Miss Gray was saying you were the only one in the hospital that attended to her work instead of trying to make dates with the doctors! I've had the nurses two years now, Miss Wentworth, and they ain't a snap better than the salesladies I used to keep. A pack of featherheads! If some of them had been discharged 'twould serve them right. But n t you, my dear. It's that old Doctor Lancaster!"

"It was, and I think he was right. I felt faint from the smell of ether—"

"Of course you did!" cried Mrs. Webb. "I always knew the day would come when you would. Those smells make my head go round and round whenever I take the short cut that side of the park. I always said you weren't cut out for that sort of work. It's all right for them strong he-horse girls that's made for it, but what you need is to marry some good man who can take care of you, not to go nursing a lot of dock-hands and seeing people's insides opened up. It's my belief that when the Lord put our insides inside and our outsides outside he meant 'em to stay there," snorted Mrs. Webb.

"Well," said Joan wearily, "it's ended now. And I don't know what I'm going to do."

"But I say it isn't ended!" cried Mrs. Webb, concentrating all her indignation against Lancaster in a venomous glare at Joan. "It's only just begun. If that old Doctor Lancaster dares to discharge you, I'm going to tell everything I know about him. Miss Wentworth, that man's no more fit to be at the head of a hospital, with ladies under him, than he's fit to fly. What is he? Nothing but a fast liver and a common drunkard."

"Never mind, Mrs. Webb!"

"But I do mind. To think of a man like that, who went about with a gang of common tramps for years, Miss Wentworth, just breaking away from his job and hoboing it up and down the country and then coming back and getting his job again and acting as he does! All that I say is common knowledge. Five years after the hospital had seen the last of him in he walks, as bold as brass, and puts the head doctor out, and says the hospital's his and he's going to run it again. And him being in charge of the nurses—him that runs 'round in his auto with every pack of cheap actresses that comes to Avonmouth! I know what they are! I haven't been in the boarding house business twenty years for nothing!"

Mrs. Webb was becoming incoherent. Joan succeeded in stopping the flow of vilification at last, mainly because Mrs. Webb had exhausted it.

"Now I tell you what you are going to do, my dear," she said. "You're going straight to that old Lancaster's house and you are going to ask for your place back. And you're going to get it, too."

"Mrs. Webb, how can I do that?"

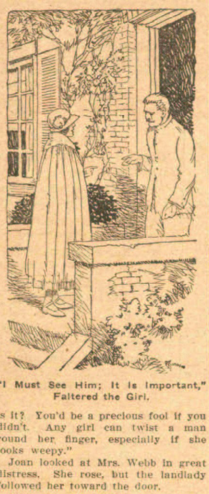
"How can you do it? Why, you can manage him all right, my dear. Yes, I guess 'tis going to be all right. I suppose he lost his temper. When a man leads the sort of life he does he hasn't much good humor left the morning after. I know about that. You just go to him and act as if you didn't care much and let him think you look on him as just the finest man in the world."

"Please, Mrs. Webb!" expostulated Joan; and as she spoke there came back into her mind vividly the sinister advice of the dark-haired girl.

"You've only got to let him see your face, my dear," continued the landlady. "You see, it's this way. When he's in the hospital he's thinking about his work. A nurse is just a nurse to him then. But after his work's over she's different. Now don't tell me you can't make that man do anything you want him to, because I know better."

Joan crimsoned. "I couldn't think of such a thing," she protested.

"And why not?" inquired the other. "If you've got good looks, ain't you going to use them? It isn't as if I was asking you to do anything wrong, is it? You'd be a precious fool if you didn't. Any girl can twist a man round her finger, especially if she looks weepy."



"I Must See Him; It Is Important," Faltered the Girl.

Joan looked at Mrs. Webb in great distress. She rose, but the landlady followed her toward the door.

"You see, my dear," she went on, "if you were given that sort of face by the Almighty, why shouldn't you use it to get plain, common justice done you? It's your job that's at stake, and you all alone in the world. All you've got to do is to make him forget that he's dealing with a nurse. There isn't anybody would think twice about it. Didn't Amanda do it this morning, coming to me with her big, black, honest face, and looking at me so that I had to take her back, as I was glad enough to do? You go straight and see that old Lancaster and try it, that's all!"

A nurse passed the window and came up the steps.

"Mrs. Webb, you won't say a word about what I've told you to the others, please?" asked Joan.

She flew upstairs and, flinging herself down on her bed, stared out dismally toward the monument. The catastrophe had swept her little, unsheltered world away. The sense of her loneliness swept over her like a black cloud, appalling her. She was cut off from life, and utterly helpless outside the medium in which she had lived.

Because she felt this sense of homesickness, her outraged pride began to vanish before the terrors that her imagination conjured up. Starvation, the ultimate terror of her childish days on the estate, which like a living thing had gnawed into her mother's nine hundred dollars, seemed incredibly real and near. She must ask for her position back!

She must face Lancaster in his home, humble her pride, and bow to him; but she watched the sun decline and the shadows lengthen, and for a time she could not bring herself to her task.

What strengthened her at last was the realization that her status must be settled before she faced the day nurses coming home off duty. She slipped on her cloak and went out of the house softly, and to escape the landlady's attentions Joan went hastily toward Lancaster's house.

She had passed it almost daily on her journeys to and from the hospital. It was an ordinary brick house in a new block at the north end of the park, and commonplace enough, but now, to her excited eyes, it seemed to reflect the grim personality of its owner in the staring windows, with the shining door knobs of brass, and the brass name plate. Her heart was beating with panic, and it was with difficulty that she contrived to press the bell and to remain until the door was opened.

A white attendant confronted her—a sullen, undersized man with square shoulders, who scowled at her as he stood blocking the passage.

"Doctor Lancaster?" asked Joan.

"He doesn't see patients after five," answered the man.

"I must see him. It is important," faltered the girl.

"Well, I'll find out if he can see you," the fellow grumbled. "Walk in if you want to."

He had not recognized Joan's uniform beneath the cloak. She gave him her card and went into the waiting room. There the sense of the terror which made that place its domain, the accumulated fears of all who had ever waited there for the approaching verdict, seemed to leap out at her.

Then Joan heard Lancaster's voice in the next room, which was divided from he waiting room by folded doors. It was audible as a bass rumble, emerging occasionally into a distinguishable sound. Lancaster was talking with somebody, and he was growing angry. That was an ill omen of what was to come!

Joan braced her nerves. She was anything but a coward, and, having made up her mind, she intended to carry her scheme through.

Suddenly Lancaster's voice was raised in violent altercation.

"A nice mess you've made of everything!" he cried. "I've tolerated you too long. I've been a fool, but I've finished with you now. Go back where you came from!"

Another voice spoke in indistinct tones. It was that of a man, and it was almost abject in contrast with Lancaster's violence.

"I've finished with you, I tell you!" cried Lancaster. "I've borne this burden long enough. You can get out of my house. You can get out of my life."

"I've borne it long enough, too," replied the other, doggedly. "Who started it? Who made the first proposal?"

"I did, out of kindness to you. And how have you repaid me?"

"By placing myself, soul and body, at your service," retorted the second man, aroused into some show of spirit.

"Who picked you out of the gutter and set you on your feet?" rejoined the doctor. "Answer that! You can't! You know you can't! Where would you be today if it were not for me?"

The second man said something in a low voice.

"Myers? A lot I care about that!" retorted Lancaster. "I tell you—what's that?" The white attendant was speaking at the door. Joan recognized his rasping voice.

"No! No!" cried Lancaster, violently. "I see nobody. Why can't these women come during my hours? Aren't they posted plainly enough upon the card in my window? Tell her?—what? Important? Well, let her wait, then, until I get ready to see her."

The man's steps died away along the rear end of the passage. Joan heard the two men talking again. Then the sounds ceased. She heard the floor in the adjoining room creak beneath a quick tread. Lancaster was coming in! Her fears gave her resolution. She would anticipate that movement, see him, insist. She left the waiting room and went into the hall.

It was hung with little pictures of a uniform size, each exactly like its neighbor. It came into the girl's mind, even during those few hasty steps, that this was essentially a man's house; a woman would have arranged things differently, have given the place personality, have made her presence felt somehow, even in the decoration of this dark passage. The atmosphere was that of an institution, not of a home.

Then she was standing with caught breath at the door of the consulting room, which was a little ajar, as if the catch had become unfastened. She knocked, opened it, and went in.

Sacred Stones Pressed by Millions of Lips

During the holiday season many tourists in Ireland visit Blarney castle and its famous kissing stone.

Of the stones variously asserted to be the original one, able to bestow the gift of persuasive eloquence upon whoever touches it with his lips, the one the kissing of which is a difficult feat, on account of its position, has received numerous kisses from daring visitors, as well as the one which is easy of access.

The Blarney stone is not unique in having received an immense number of chaste salutes. St. Peter's statue, in the nave of St. Peter's church, in Rome, can claim a like honor. In fact, the toe of this bronze figure's foot has been worn away by kisses.

Perhaps, however, the Mohammedans possess the most-kissed object in the world, namely, the celebrated Black stone at Mecca.

No true Moslem, after having made a pilgrimage to the Prophet's birthplace, would think of leaving it without first kissing this sacred stone.

Said to have been white originally, the Black stone is stated by those to whom it is an object of veneration to have been turned to its present color either through the sins of men or by the tremendous number of kisses bestowed upon it.

Last of Kingly Line

The title "Last of the Goths" was bestowed upon Roderick, king of the Visigoths in Spain, who was defeated and slain by the Moors in 711 A. D. He was the thirty-fourth and last of the Visigothic line of kings, who reigned in Spain from 414 to 711 A. D. Southey has written a historical poem on this subject, entitled "Roderick, the Last of the Goth."—Kansas City Star.

Peculiar Qualities of Spanish River

Count Pedro Maura y Sereda said at a dinner at the Spanish embassy:

"Madrid is on the Manzanares river. The Manzanares probably contains less water than any river in the world, yet no stream has ever been so joked about.

"A German said it was the best river he had ever seen, as it was navigable either by automobile or on foot.

"Ferdinand II used to declare that once, when a visiting prince desired to take a walk along the river bed, it had to be watered first to lay the dust.

"Count Romananes said the Manzanares was the best river in the world to dry washing in.

"Once a young woman from Seville grew faint at a bullfight, and they brought her a glass of water, but she waved it aside and murmured:

"'Give it to the Manzanares; it needs it more than I.'"—Buffalo Courier.

Aim Was Too True

One Detroiter dreads for summer to come now. He is rather doubtful as to the friendship of his next door neighbor, who, in the garden-making days, spent many an hour in the twilight gossiping over the back fence. The other evening his wife asked him to carry an empty food can to the back of the lot to the refuse basket. It was dark and cold and icy, so he hit upon a bright idea. He tossed the can in the general direction of the basket and waited to hear it hit. Just then the neighbor popped into view, the can seemed to take on life, it swirled in a beautiful curve straight for the neighbor. It hit. It was some minutes before the hurler took a chance and slipped into the house.—Detroit News.

Trade Tricks

Senator Mangus Johnson, the Minnesota dirt farmer, said in a Kimball speech:

"There are tricks in every trade. The farmer is an honest man—an honest man if ever there was one—yet there are tricks even in farming.

"An old farmer once said to me in my youth:

"'Never auction off a field of grain except in windy weather.'

"'No? Why not?' said I.

"'Gosh, you're green, young fellow,' said the farmer. 'Don't you know that when a grain field's waving in the wind it looks ever so much thicker? Because then, of course, you see the same head three or four times over.'"

A Lady of Distinction

Is recognized by the delicate, fascinating influence of the perfume she uses. A bath with Cuticura Soap and hot water to thoroughly cleanse the pores followed by a dusting with Cuticura Talcum powder usually means a clear, sweet, healthy skin.—Advertisement.

Heroes Remembered

On Gallipoli today, said General Sir Ian Hamilton at a service in the War Memorial hall of Hornsey Cottage hospital, the only living things are the graveyards. Kritha is a ruin. Every farmhouse is a ruin. There are no inhabitants now; no villages; no cultivation; no shepherds; no flocks; only a few beachcombers eking out a miserable existence by the sea. But the cemeteries are a mass of flowers, tended as if each soldier boy living there had been the son of an emperor. At least fathers and mothers, brothers, sisters, widows and children could think happily and proudly of the resting places of their heroes.—Montreal Family Herald.

Return of an Old Friend

Bay rum has come back to the barber shop after a long, long absence, and old-timers who prefer it to perfumed witch-hazel are glad. Years ago, somebody, getting the idea that bay rum was indispensable for barbers' use, began jacking up the price. The barbers stood for several raises, then resorted to witch-hazel, and have been using it ever since. Now bay rum, penitent, promising good behavior and begging for another trial, is getting it. It is an old, old story, and bay rum is not by any means the first offender.—Chicago News.

The programs for the different days include talks and discussion on subjects ranging all the way from meat cuts and cutting to the homemakers bookshelf. The home economics exhibits will cover interesting stories in connection with nutritional problems, clothing, home decoration, etc.

Visitors at the Farmers Week are being urged to "Bring The Family."

Last Eclipse In This Generation

Astronomers tell us that we have seen the last eclipse for this generation and no more can be expected for a century. This is not pleasant news as by the time another one comes round we shall all be gathered to the earthly mold and the next generation will be so busy aeroplaning and "jazzing" there will be no time or disposition to consider such a simple matter as a cloud over the sun, in fact it is doubtful if they will realize what the eclipse is,

Those who missed Saturday morning's eclipse of the sun will not only have to wait a matter of another hundred years and there will be another around for their benefit.

The eclipse was partial in this latitude, but for about an hour was plainly visible. It was at the peak at about 8:02 a. m.

Miss Mary Corbett Speaks

Miss Mary Corbett formerly of this village, who has for some years been among the "corn crackers" of Kentucky engaged in bettering their condition, happened to be in the audience at the Congregational church on Sunday morning last, and so was called upon to give a short talk of her work which proved extremely interesting as it generally is, to the hearers. She told of the condition of roads in that part of the country necessitating travel mostly by horseback or on foot, and hard conditions of life in most of the families. While education has been considerably neglected in that desolate land yet people are quick to grasp every opportunity handed out for improvement, and when northern teachers come in there the inhabitants will sometimes travel for miles in the rain under poor conditions to listen for a few minutes to a talk on religious matters or other topics which they crave. We are informed that habits of thrift and enterprise can quite often be introduced to them with advantage and frequently they can be placed on a much higher plane of living. Vital statistics tell us that among the natives of the foothills of Kentucky there is a condition of habits and environs extremely hard to overcome, in fact throughout the entire South they are badly ensared by "dope" of all kinds. It has become so wide spread that the problem is up to the government. Moonshine also plays havoc with their social life and helps to keep them in degradation despite all efforts. Miss Corbett is located at Smith Kentucky, and we presume this is in the mountains though we have not looked it up on the map.

When the 20th Century Leaves New York

Few railroads have achieved any greater distinction for their trains than the New York Central has for its Twentieth Century Limited.

Here is a train de luxe and the railroad doesn't mind telling you about it. For many years its fame has been spread about until it probably stands for the utmost in railroad travel. It has all the frills of the best trains—stenographer, valet, barber and all the rest. But it goes one step further.

When this train leaves the New York Central makes a big fuss over it. It has half a dozen station masters scurrying about the gate as though the end of the world was coming. Porters dash hither and yon making their contribution to the scene. Down the platform from the gate to the train there is a red carpet over which the passengers who ride on this train are personally escorted by the road. Outside the gate the common people look on with wonder and admiration.

Soon the last car has disappeared on its way out of the train shed, the carpet is rolled up, and there is no doubt about the fact that the big event of the day in the Grand Central has just transpired.—From the New York Times, November 30.

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.
For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.
That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.
We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.
Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

As She Sized Him Up

Ambassador Richard Washburn Child, sailing homeward on the George Washington, told a story about a corpulent statesman.

"This corpulent person," he said, "once made a speech before a Sunday school. He talked about rewards and punishments—the rewards that are the meed of a good life, the punishments that a bad life entails.

"And now, children," he yelled dramatically, as he whacked the lectern with his enormous hand—"now, children, what would happen to me after I died if I led a bad life?"

A naughty little girl piped in a shrill voice:

"The fat would be in the fire for fair!"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

> PITY FOR HIM
> SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see.

Chapter III

She found herself in a large, lighted room, with the sense of an institution, though it was well furnished. She saw the white enameled table, the glass case full of instruments, the empty court outside; then John Lancaster himself, alone, standing with bent head behind a chair, on which he was leaning.

As Joan entered an inner door began to open. Joan knew that the man with whom Lancaster had been quarreling was inside a room behind it. She dreaded lest he should come in; but suddenly the door closed.

She looked at Lancaster again. It was still quite light within the consulting room, but Lancaster, standing with his back to the window, was in silhouette, so that Joan could not see his face clearly.

"Well, madam?" he asked, raising his head.

"I came to speak to you about this morning," began Joan hurriedly. "It means—"

He indicated a chair. He was gazing at her with some embarrassment—Joan thought because of the scene in which he had just participated. "Tell me the trouble," he began, as she seated herself, drawing up his own chair toward hers.

Now Joan could see his face, and, to her astonishment, it did not bear the expression of the smirking bully whom she had seen that morning, nor yet of the man who had addressed another man in such terms as one might use to a slave. It was not an unkindly face. And it was unmistakably that of a sick man.

For a moment she remembered the stories told of his behavior in the operating theater, of the gentleness that seemed to transform the man, as if he possessed a dual personality. Then she was recalled to herself by Lancaster's repetition of his remark.

Joan rose up hastily. She realized that the doctor had mistaken her for a patient. Her face meant nothing to him, any more than her distress of the day had affected him. With a nervous movement she unfastened her cloak, disclosing her uniform.

"I am Miss Wentworth," she explained. "I came to tell you—I came to say—" Then, treading out her pride once more, "I came to ask if you won't reconsider your decision to suspend me. My work means everything to me. It is my life work, my vocation. I always wanted to be a nurse. I felt that it was my task to help alleviate suffering. Doctor Lancaster, apart from my own interests, I want to graduate to be able to help others. Won't you give me another opportunity?"

She spoke with her hands unconsciously clasped before her; the recollection of her earlier hopes, the thought of their frustration brought a quiver into her voice. When she stopped she saw that Lancaster was looking at her with obvious interest.

"Tell me about this morning," he said quietly.

"I had to come away without breakfast, and the fumes of the ether made me faint. I was nearly fainting when you asked me for the scalpel, and I couldn't see the tray. Indeed it was not the operation that made me ill. I have never been reprimanded before. The lady superintendent had told me several times that the hospital appreciated my work. So I hoped you would be willing to overlook my blunder and let me graduate."

Lancaster looked at her with a singular expression that seemed to mask his thoughts. She could not tell how her plea had impressed him. When he spoke she was dumfounded by the harshness and casualness of his tone.

"Why have you come to my house about this?" he asked. "This is not my hour for seeing patients—I mean people."

"I am sorry if I did wrong!" cried the girl. "But if you knew how much it means to me—"

"I can do nothing for you now," said Lancaster.

The voice was harsh again, but curiously flat, as if he was trying to restrain his emotions, hold himself in; as if he was afraid. . . . but afraid of what? Not of his anger.

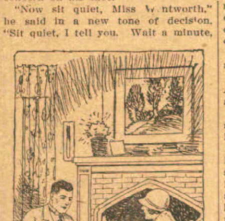
Joan was standing in front of him, and even then the appearance of the man had something pathological about it to her mind. There was not the least jauntiness or self-consciousness about him. He looked older than in the morning, depressed, and certainly ill. His manner indicated that of one just aroused from sleep. His eyes were very bright, and his face unnaturally pale. He was pressing his thumb and finger firmly against the arm of the chair, as if for support. Joan remembered the stories of his drinking habits. But she saw at once that Lancaster had not been drinking. She had attended too many alcoholic patients at the hospital not to be sure of that.

"Doctor Lancaster, my dismissal means the loss of all my prospects. I came to ask if you won't inquire about my record and then give me another chance," said Joan. "And I am sorry if I came at an inconvenient time; but now that I am here I must request the courtesy of a final answer. I shall not come to you again."

"I can't answer you," said Lancaster, as if speaking in his sleep. "In the interests of discipline—it is impossible to answer you now."

Joan turned away. The flat refusal stunned her. And there was something preposterous about Lancaster's manner, perfectly incomprehensible to her. What was the matter with him? Why did the room turn round and round? Suddenly she felt Lancaster's hand on her arm. He was supporting her, helping her into a chair; and through the fog she saw a look of concern on his face.

"Now sit quiet, Miss Wentworth," he said in a new tone of decision. "Sit quiet, I tell you. Wait a minute, and, when you are feeling composed, let me see if I can't help you."



But They Meet in a Day or Two, and Then—"

He drew his chair toward hers again and leaned toward her.

"I have not been feeling well," he explained. "I was not myself when I discharged you this morning. When I refused to discuss the matter with you it was because it is an invariable rule that the nurses are not supposed to come to my house. Outside the hospital I see nobody connected with the hospital. I'll see what I can do. The matter will have to go before the board now, I suppose. Why did you come away without your breakfast? Why didn't your folks insist on your having something to eat?"

"I have no people," answered Joan. "My mother died nearly two years ago. We came here from Lucas county, and she was taken ill soon after our arrival. I hoped to get my diploma and have my profession."

"You had no breakfast, and I discharged you for fainting, and your diploma means everything to you," said Lancaster slowly, clasping his hands as if in thought. Then, with a decisive, odd gesture, he leaned still nearer Joan and dropped his voice as he spoke, as if he was afraid that the man in the next room would hear him.

"Remember this as long as you live," he said. "In this life people are not penalized for incapacity; they are punished for being unfortunate. Are you unlucky, Miss Wentworth?"

"I—why, yes, I suppose I must be," she answered, looking at Lancaster in growing astonishment, mixed with a little fear.

"And you have sympathy for the unfortunate? You—you said something like that just now—about wishing to be of help to others. Are you loyal and staunch?"

"I hope I am," said Joan uneasily.

"If one is loyal to others, one does not fear one's own misfortunes," said Lancaster. "They rise out of some fault or weakness—if one follows the trail far enough back into one's self. I've learned that, heaven knows! Miss Wentworth," he ended suddenly, "would you consider a temporary position while your case is under investigation by the board?"

"But they meet in a day or two, and then—"

"Would you consider it," repeated Lancaster, "if you could be of greater service than you know? Suppose I said to you as I am saying now, that you seem to me the best suited, by loyalty and good will, to help, of all the nurses I know, would you accept?"

"Then, Doctor Lancaster," cried Joan triumphantly, "if you have that opinion of me you have no excuse for not getting the board to reinstate me."

The man faltered as she looked at him. He was no longer terrible to her. He seemed to have put off some hateful armor that he assumed, and revealed weakness that none had suspected. Pity for him, a vast and heartfelt pity whose cause she was unable to divine, began to stir the girl's heart.

"I pledge you my word to do all I can for you," said Lancaster. "But you must help me in turn. I need you for this purpose. I want you to go into the country for a month. It will rest you, too, and you are run down. Have you ever heard of the Lancaster institute in Drexham county?"

"I think so," answered Joan, rather doubtfully.

"It is a hobby of mine. My father established it twenty-five years ago for the hill people, but the funds became squandered, and it is not in good shape. However, it does some good, and it is the only place of its kind within a score of miles. Doctor Jenkins is in charge, and I—I run down there every now and then to keep him up to the mark. There is a matron there. The cases comprise a little light surgical work occasionally, an alcoholic or two after paydays for the mining element, pneumonia in its season, and—yes, there's a demented woman there, but she won't come under your care. It's in the hill country. How would you like to go?"

"I don't know what to say," answered the girl.

"But you have no attachments in Avonmouth?" he asked, looking hard at her.

"Nobody. But, Doctor Lancaster, all my thoughts are bent on my reinstatement."

"I'll do my best for you if you will help me out with this case," he answered. "And you will get strong in a month and take up your work again with a light heart. You will have a small remuneration, and your fare, of course. You'll go?"

"I'll go, then," answered Joan.

"Then listen to me," he said, again speaking with lowered voice and glancing back in apprehension toward the inner door. "I shall not see you before you start, but I rely on you. You must leave on the nine o'clock train tomorrow morning. And you must speak to nobody about this undertaking."

"I shall say nothing, Doctor Lancaster. And I have to thank you with all my heart."

He frowned at her. And the curious indecision in his manner, the furtiveness of the man, which still disquieted the girl, was in extraordinary contrast to Lancaster's appearance in the theater that morning, to everything that she had associated with him. She was utterly bewildered.

As she rose Lancaster came very close to her, and now his voice was little more than a whisper.

"I'll wire to Mrs. Fraser, the matron," he said, "and I'll have the buggy meet you at the station—Lancaster station, Miss Wentworth. And I wish—"

But the door opened, and the white attendant slouched into the room. He stared insolently at Joan. "Doctor Lancaster—" he began.

"I'll see you when I am alone, Myers," answered Lancaster.

"Doctor Lancaster, will you please give me a few moments of your time," said the man urgently; and underneath the plea Joan seemed to see the insolence and contempt in his heart. Suddenly the idea came to her that this must be the man whom Lancaster had berated in the consulting room.

She went out, and as soon as she was in the passage she heard the attendant begin to address Lancaster in excited tones. Then the inner door opened. She fancied there were three men, after all. Somebody was speaking in high tones; and then Lancaster's deep, booming voice rang out.

> Apparently, Dr. Lancaster has a dual personality. Is his offer genuine? Or is it a trap for the handsome nurse?

Early Jewish Cemetery Now Business District

On New Bowery, near Oliver street, New York city, is a little Jewish cemetery, said to be the oldest Jewish burial ground in North America, says the Detroit News. It once occupied what is now Chatham square. The grant for the graveyard was issued by Gov. Peter Stuyvesant in 1656. The first Jews in America are supposed to have arrived September 12, 1654, on the bark Catarina, which brought 27 refugees from Cape St. Anthony, Brazil.

The spot selected for the cemetery was out among the sandhills, outside of the city. There was a range of hills, at the foot of which was the present site of Chatham square, and on the crest of one of these hills, facing east, the cemetery was started. The location was ideal, overlooking the meadows below the city to the south, with the East river in the distance. When the War of the Revolution came batteries were planted in the body of the cemetery and on its hills. In 1856, 200 years after the opening of the final sleeping place among the hills, New Bowery was cut through, and all that was left of the cemetery was a 57-foot front on that thoroughfare.

When Niagara Was Dry

The winter of 1847-1848 was extraordinarily severe in this country. Heavy ice formed in Lake Erie. When it was broken up during the latter part of March, the winds swept the ice into the entrance of the Niagara river at Buffalo, where it jammed in a solid mass completely choking the outlet of Lake Erie with the result that on March 29, 1848, the falls of Niagara were practically dry.

OUR PROPHET

By—
Joseph Oliver Barnhart

Around the ancient mountain's foot
God's people stood in awe,
And waited for their prophet that should bring them down the law.
For days they'd stood and wondered there until Jehovah came
And wrapped the summit of the mount with clouds of living flame.
God's trumpet pealed and up the height,
beyond the wreaths of snow,
Into the presence of the Lord they saw their prophet go,
And he returned to give to them a constitution grand
That made their state at once the dread and wonder of the lands.
He shared it not, but died alone, touched
by the hand of God,
And angels, where he sleeps today, are watching o'er the sod.

* * * * * * *

Again upon a mountain's height our nation looks today
While from its top the pale mists of centuries roll away.
We see the glory of the Lord wrap the tall peak in flame,
Again we hear the trumpet blast repeating
LINCOLN'S name.
We see him answering the call and toiling up the steep
Till swallowed by the lurid flames that round the mountain leap.
He comes back and the mighty truths
God whispered in his ear
Shall ring through every age and clime while men have ears to hear.
The law of Heaven, once writ in stone,
was written in his soul,
Till through it a divided land was made a perfect whole.
A prophet of the Lord was he, mighty in word and deed,
And not alone unto the race that he
from bondage freed,
But everywhere that man shall hold his brother man in thrall
The name of Freedom's champion, the noblest of them all,
Shall stand a synonym of right, a menace
to all wrong,
Till all the world join in one grand emancipation song.
We stand in awe, and wondering gaze
at the proportions vast,
Where each succeeding glory grows still brighter than the last,
And in the sun's last lingering beam its light shall shine afar,
And when the sun goes down, its peak shall point up to the stars.

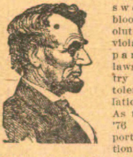
Lincoln Said—



"LET every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to support the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his fathers and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in the schools, in seminaries and colleges; let it be printed in primers, in spelling books and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpits, proclaimed in legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice. And, in short, let it be the political religion of the nation; and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay of all sexes and tongues and colors and conditions, sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars."

Man of Wisdom and Sound Philosophy

Mr. Lincoln was on the train going to Gettysburg to make that ever-memorable speech. A beautiful little girl, having a bouquet of rosebuds in her hand, was lifted to the window of the car and, with a childish lisp, she said: "Flowerth for the President." Mr. Lincoln stepped to the window, took the rosebuds, bent down and kissed the child, saying: "You're the sweet little rosebud yourself. I hope your life will open into perpetual beauty and goodness." On one occasion, when he had appointed a man to a position and, doubtless for some good reason, had recalled the appointment, he was asked about it; and his reply was, "Yes, I have, and I don't think much of a man who is not wiser today than he was yesterday." A remark full of wisdom and sound philosophy.

Immortal Words

"The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here." Is there any finer, more fitting memorial thought than this one given us by our world-beloved and world-mourned martyr President?

Fireman on Funeral Train

Frank Pond, who was the engineer who handled Lincoln's funeral train in 1865, is still in active service. He runs a pony engine at the Mosinee (Wis.) paper mills, and he works every day, although he is more than eighty-three years old. He was a fireman on the engine that pulled the train that carried Lincoln as President-elect to Washington. The locomotive was the crack engine on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad at the time, and it had a name, the Reindeer.—Indianapolis News.

One of Lincoln's Parables

I once steered a raft down the Mississippi river. It went along delightfully with the current; but I didn't meet any rafts going up stream—they were all steamboats.—Lincoln.

Human Rights

I believe each individual is naturally entitled to do as he pleases with himself and the fruit of his labor, so long as he in nowise interferes with any other person's right.—Lincoln.

Then you should look to your kidneys! Colds and chills are apt to weaken the kidneys and allow toxic poisons to upset blood and nerves. Then may come daily backache, stabbing pains, headaches, dizziness, and irregular or painful passage of the kidney secretions.

School Ferried Far

Taking a schoolhouse off dry land, floating it through canal locks and towing it seven miles across Puget sound to a new location on an island, was the unusual feat accomplished recently by a firm of contractors in Seattle, Wash., says Popular Science Monthly. The schoolhouse originally was situated on the shores of Lake Washington, adjoining Seattle. With powerful winches and screwjacks operated simultaneously, the building was raised off the ground and skidded on rollers onto a large barge. Two tugs then towed the school through Lake Washington canal to Puget sound. The school arrived undamaged.

King Has Monopoly

When the king telephones, let all other instruments be dumb! That's the rule in Mecca, where King Hussein of Hedjaz has had a telephone system installed, says a recent article in the New Zealand Herald.

The rule is effectively enforced by an automatic device which instantly disconnects all other telephones whenever the receiver is lifted from the king's instrument. As long as King Hussein's telephone is in use, no other telephone can be used in Mecca, save only the one with which the king is talking.

Mankind is everywhere the same.

Chimpanzee in Church

The congregation of a church at Montecito, a fashionable suburb of Santa Barbara, Cal., was thrown into near panic by the appearance of a huge chimpanzee which walked calmly down an aisle and seated itself in a pew. The big simian was a pet of a member of the millionaire colony and had escaped from its home two hours before.

Farm Women Start Campaign For Davis

Show That Republican Tariff Has Hurt Agricultural Producers By Increasing Prices Of Their Necessities.

Indianapolis, October.—Under the direction of Mrs. James R. Riggs, a prominent farm woman of near Sullivan, Indiana, the National Committee of Farm Women to promote the election of John W. Davis for president and Charles W. Bryan for vice-president, has been formed. The committee is formed largely of women hitherto independent and non-partisan in politics. Mrs. Riggs is chairman and the following are members: Mrs. Alice Hoppes, Long Island, Kansas; Mrs. Howard Willson, Verdin, Illinois; Mrs. Thomas E. Cassman, Owatonna, Minnesota, and Mrs. Jud Canfield, Ada, Michigan. Names are daily being added to the committee list from the farming states.

The committee has addressed the following letter to about a million farm women in the Central, Middle Western and Northwetern States:

"You, as a farmer's wife, know the existing conditions in agriculture. Are you interested in a change for the batter? Do you know that the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar increased from 100 cents in 1913 to 112 cents in 1919, has fallen to 59.5 cents in 1923? It is a little higher now on account of short crops, and possibly some political manipulation.

"The cause: 1912 to 1920 were the best years for farmers as their dollar had high purchasing power then. These years were during a Democratic administration, under a Democratic tariff.

"The Republicans have always told the farmer that a high protective tariff was what he needed for prosperity. We have now the Fordney-McCumber tariff, the highest we have ever known. The farmer's dollar under this tariff is worth about 67 cents—a few months ago it was down to 59.5 cents.

"What does this prove? A high protective tariff never has helped and never will help the farmer.

"Mr. Davis and the Democratic party believe in a tariff only sufficiently competitive; a tariff fitted to the back that has the burden to bear. Mr. Coolidge had his opportunity to help the farmer, and he did not see, could not grasp the thing necessary for relief. He instituted investigations, created commissions to investigate, and who pays for this? We do—the people. Now he says 'More investigations,' which means more money spent uselessly, while we, the farmers, suffer and pay the costs.

"Mr. Davis has grasped the condition of the farmer, as plainly shown in his Omaha speech. He has the courage and the ability to do the thing that must be done for agriculture. A vote for Davis and Bryan is a vote to help you. A vote for LaFollette is a half vote for Coolidge, who stands convicted of not having done the things we needed done in our hour of greatest necessity. The women are a deciding factor in this election. Will not you, as a farmer's wife, think on these subjects and cast your vote for Davis?"

POPULARITY OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

Test Shows Small Country Banks as Well as City Banks Strongly Favorable.

Assertions by some politicians that small banks generally are inimical to the Federal Reserve System were put to the test recently by a committee appointed by John D. Phillips, president of the State Bank Division of the American Bankers' Association by means of a questionnaire sent to 11,000 state banks. The result indicated that an overwhelming majority of them are, in fact, friendly to the System.

Two questions were put to the banks. The first was as follows:

"Do you believe that the Federal Reserve System has been beneficial to the agricultural, commercial and banking interests of the country and that it should be perpetuated?"

To this 4,934 replies were received. Of these 4,024 voted "yes" without qualification, and only 61 voted "no." Further answers still coming in when this tabulation was made indicated the same favorable trend.

The second question asked by Mr. Phillips' committee was:

"If your not being a member should contribute to the destruction of the System, would you join?"

While the great majority of the state banks are not members of the System, largely for technical reasons, the answers showed that the bulk of those non-members who are eligible to join would do so if such action were necessary to save the System. To his second question 2,876 have been recorded as voting "yes" and only 725 as "no." Many refrained from voting on this question because under the present rules they are ineligible for membership.

Some replies voiced certain criticisms of the System, but these universally dealt with details of administration or of the rules and not with the principles of the institution.

RECONSTRUCTION

A man came into a Nebraska bank in the spring of 1922 and asked for financial assistance. His statement prepared in the Service Department showed he was about bankrupt; that he owed $1,200 more than his equipment was worth. He had a farm rented for the year. Further credit had been refused him in his own bank and he was about ready to quit and apply the proceeds from the sale of his equipment to his debts.

Gun Toters Are Scored

For a number of years it has been as good as confessed that the nuisance of allowing every species and color of man to carry a firearm on his person was responsible for about seven-eighths of the murders or casualties growing out of disputes and bickerings, but just how to take care of the problem has not as yet revealed itself to the Michigan Congress. There are a large number of arms factories whose entire business consists in manufacturing and selling guns and revolvers or more modernly known as the automatic and their wide advertising has attracted many thousands of dollars in trade from all classes of people and more especially from crooks and hold up men To put these prosperous factories out of business at one stroke has not seemed perfectly correct inasmuch as their's is a legitimate business, but to-day there are bills being prepared to oust this form of trade.

These bills have been prepared in accordance with the best authority on crime, the association of Police Chiefs of Michigan and make it a felony for a man to carry a gun on his person unless an officer, and if a crime is committed by the toter of a weapon whether he uses the weapon or not it carries a penalty of ten years for that alone regardless of the other crime. We have supposed the law was fixed some time ago to compel dealers to secure the permission of the sheriff before selling a pistol, but this law is either weak in the back or it has never appeared worthy of enforcement. The present bills will put teeth in the law and no dealer can dispose of these goods under heavy penalty unless he has proper authority. All owners of firearms of whatever nature must register them with the authorities not later than July 1st, next.

The state Police of Massachusetts complain that the looseness of the gun toters law in that state has made them more direct trouble than any other thing during the past two years, especially as regards the K. K. K. gatherings. For some reason every Klansman considers it his right and bounden duty to tote a gun and just why he should do this more constantly than any other citizen is not plain to the novice. Klansmen and non-Klansmen are constantly clashing in Massachusetts same as in other localities, and there is always more or less gun play, whereas if the guns were taken away from all of them, whether Klansmen or not, there would be much better law-enforcement and far less shooting and crime.

You can find plenty of evidence right in your own locality of gun toting among the younger class of men and it is something which is not only entirely unnecessary but a menace to the peace and sobriety of the community. A large number of men engaged in occupations which keep them late home at night are habitual gun-toters and probably for one case of real handy defense in case of actual need there are twenty-five unnecessary killings and murders on the average but these men reason that the "crook" will always have a gun anyhow, and why not decent citizens for their own defense? Seems like a real logical argument but when you come to estimate the number of men who travel the highways and by-ways night after night at late hours, absolutely unarmed and often-times possessed of considerable cash, and are never molested, the argument gets weak in fact it needs Peruna. The writer can recall a half dozen murders in this county in the past twelve years, purely the result of the toted gun, and liquor, an awful bad combination, and some of them without any liquor at all, the victims of which would be alive and enjoying God's sunshine if the gun toters had been extinguished. But the matter gets mighty close to some young blade's hearts when you talk of taking away the gun, which is a noxious habit like tobacco and whiskey drinking—absolutely vicious and unnecessary, but likewise a dear baby to give up. There is today thousands of dollars worth of gun hardware right in Adams township which ought to go to Midgley along with the "booze" which he has captured to be locked up in the strong room, there to repose as a tribute to the enterprise of "holdups" and Bad Men generally. Take for instance the worst holdups, bank robberies and train robberies—the investigation usually discloses the culprits as merely boys who have gotten a brain storm from reading accounts of what some bandits have done, and being allowed a good deal of lee-way, obtained high grade automatic revolvers and started out to astonish the world a career which usually winds up in the penitentiary or the electric chair. However, this does not solve the problem of disarming the crooks. The logical question is "where do the crooks get their hardware mostly? The mailorder house undoubtedly stands sponsor for most of this trade and cheap pawn shops most of the rest. Both these institutions should be put out of commission in that line at once.

Story of Colleen Bawn

Those who have read the story of Colleen Bawn, the beautiful Irish maiden who was brutally murdered on the River Shannon, will be surprised to know that in Jackson there resides an Irishman who once lived in the neighborhood of this incident in Ireland and his ancestors [including father, mother, aunts and uncles, lie buried in the same church-yard where rests the beautiful Colleen, famed in history and song. The opera, "The Lily of Killarney" is written from her life, and gives a full snynopsis of it from beginning to end. This Irishman, by name, Michael Behan lives at 510 East Trail street, Jackson, Mich., and is well acquainted with all the events before and after the heroine's death.

She was born in Ballycahane, near Croom, County Limerick in 1801, of humble parentage, her father being a common laborer. At an early age Colleen was bereft of her mother and went to reside with her father's relatives, (shoemakers) where she was reared, hence taking their name (O'Connor) though her real name was Hanly. When 17 years of age she met Captain John Scanlon of the Navy and he was carried away by her great beauty. They were married in 1819 by a suspended Catholic priest in Limerick and departed without the marriage certificate This and other occurrences at the time would seem to indicate that the prelate was a scoundrel and probably had no social standing in his church, also that he may have been a dupe of Scanlon. Possibly he had no legal right to perform a ceremony. But in any event the trial of Scanlon afterward apparently did not clear his name.

The happy couple were going down the street when they noticed the oversight and returning to the priest for the document, found him lying dead on the floor.

The Scanlons were of the aristocracy, and could not bear the disgrace of one of their number intermarrying with the scum, hence the result was easy to foresee. Captain Scanlon soon tired of his beautiful bride under these withering influences and he became obsessed with the idea that separation was the only alternative. But two methods appealed to him; he could either deny the marriage point blank or he could dispose of the Colleen, and the reprobate chose the last.

Scanlon had a foster brother who was a worthless drunken brute and with Scanlon and wife he went fishing on the River Shannon. With the party were also three other men and a woman. Returning, they had several miles to row, and evening at hand, and a storm also coming on, they were forced to go ashore and take shelter in a public house for the night. One of the men testified that Scanlon's foster brother forced the wedding ring off the finger of the Colleen during the evening. Next day the woman and three men departed, leaving Sullivan, Scanlon and his wife and that was the last seen of the Colleen until her nude body with a rope around the neck, was discovered tangled in the bushes several miles below some two months later. Sullivan went into hiding and could not be located for twelve months. Scanlon was arrested and tried and evidence showed he was guilty. It was very hard to convict a member of the nobility and the jury disagreed three times before the verdict was reached. Scanlon was hanged with a silken rope. Later Sullivan was captured; he broke down and confessed the whole thing.

It seems Scanlon planned the deed with a conscience of stone. He made Sullivan too drunk for comprehension, and sent him with the wife in a boat across the river, but even then the brute lacked nerve to commit the deed, returning to shore. Here he was met by Scanlon who cursed him roundly for a coward, offered him a substantial reward and again sent him out in the boat, warning him not to return with the girl. The second time the murder was done.

She was buried in a little country churchyard about five miles from Kilrush. Nothing but a plain headstone marks her grave at present and that will have disappeared soon since relic hunters are constantly chipping it away. Several marble crosses have been carried off piecemeal, in the same manner, as each person who visits the spot retains a souvenir.

On the stone is this simple inscription:

"They raised her from the shore
And in a rural grave they laid her
And many a burning curse pursued
The heartless villian who betrayed
[her"

Radio to The Little Red Schoolhouse

The little Red Schoolhouse on the hill is due to stage a comeback with Radio in the role of Godfather. According to an announcement received here from Station W. L. S., Chicago, arrangements have been completed whereby special school programs will be broadcast for the use of the pupil and the teacher in the rural schools,

The first school program will occur February 20, from 2:00 to 2:30 and there will be a similar program every Friday afternoon. The programs will include addresses by leading figures in all fields as well as high grade entertainment, will touch on all phases of school activities, the aim being to give the country school all the advantages of contact in the larger cities. When ever possible, it is planned to have the children take an important part and groups probably will be taken to Chicago at intervals for that purpose.

"I would make clearly and definitely one other requirement, that no individual, or group of individuals, may expect any governmental favors in return for party assistance. Whatever anyone gives must be given for the common good, or not at all. Contributions can be received on no other basis.

"For the first time after having opportunity fully to organize, the women of the nation are bringing the new force which they represent directly to bear on our political affairs. I know that the influence of womanhood will guard the home, which is the citadel of the nation. I know it will be a protector of childhood. I know it will be on the side of humanity. I welcome it as a great instrument of mercy and a mighty agency of peace. I want every woman to vote.

"The Constitution is the sole source and guaranty of national freedom. We believe that the safest place to declare and interpret the Constitution which the people have made is in the Supreme court of the United States.

"Under our institutions there is no limitation on the aspirations a mother may have for her children. That system I pray to continue. This country would not be a land of opportunity, America would not be America, if the people were shackled with government monopolies.

"Our country has adopted prohibition and provided by legislation for its enforcement. It is the duty of the citizen to observe the law, and the duty of the Executive to enforce. I propose to do my duty as best I can.

For Child Labor Amendment.

"Our different states have had different standards, or no standards at all, for child labor. The congress should have authority to provide a uniform law applicable to the whole nation which will protect childhood. Our country cannot afford to let anyone live off the earnings of its youth of tender years. Their places are not in the factory, but in the school, that the men and women of tomorrow may reach a higher state of existence and the nation a higher standard of citizenship.

"I am in favor of national defense, not merely as an abstract state of mind, but as a concrete mode of action. I favor not merely talking about it, but doing something about it. I do not want the safety of my country to be imperiled in its domestic or foreign relations by any failure to be ready to preserve order or repel attack. But I propose to work for voluntary observance of law and mutual covenants of peace.

Common Sense Greatest Asset.

"We are likely to hear a great deal of discussion about liberal thought and progressive action. It is well for the country to have liberality in thought and progress in action, but its greatest asset is common sense. In the commonplace things of life lies the strength of the nation. It is not in brilliant conceptions and strokes of genius that we shall find the chief reliance of our country, but in the home, in the school, and in religion. America will continue to defend these shrines. Every evil force that seeks to desecrate or destroy them will find that a Higher Power has endowed the people with an inherent spirit of resistance. The people know the difference between pretense and reality. They want to be told the truth. They want to be trusted. They want a chance to work out their own material and spiritual salvation. The people want a government of common sense.

"These, Mr. Chairman, are some of the beliefs which I hold, some of the principles which I propose to support. Because I am convinced tha

YOUNG FARMER PLEADS GUILTY

STATE DETECTIVE UNCOVERS CONCLUSIVE PROOF OF MURDER OF WIFE

When Ralph Lindsley, a young farmer of St. Joseph county, pleaded guilty in circuit court to the murder of his wife, he admitted the facts which had been disclosed by unusual detective work.

One morning Lindsley drove into Sturgis and reported to the chief of police that Mrs. Lindsley had committed suicide by shooting herself. The coroner and other officials found the woman's body lying in a pool of blood, with a bullet wound in the forehead, and a revolver lying close by.

H. Erickson of the state Bureau of Identification was sent for and took a complete set of photographs, also taking the finger-prints found upon the revolver barrel. Lieutenant John S. Palmer, in charge of the criminal investigation bureau of the Department of Public Safety then took the case.

Tests were made with the revolver which showed that the woman could not have shot herself, inasmuch as powder burns were lacking which would have occurred if she had held the gun

In seeking a clue to the motive for the killing, Lieutenant Palmer learned that Lindsley had been attentive to a young married woman of the neighborhood. Search was made and the fragments of a 16-page letter, which had been read and torn up and the pieces thrown away, were gathered. It took a day and a night to put the letter together and then the motive was plain.

Lindsley had planned to get rid of his wife and also of the other woman's husband, it appeared.

Finger prints of the revolver and measurements showing the direction of the bullet and approximate fixing of the height fro mwhich it was fired were other details entering into the case.

Finally, the burden of evidence being too strong to be overcome, Lindsley came into court and pleaded guilty. He is now serving his sentence in Jackson prison.

MICHIGAN HAS NAVY ON DETROIT RIVER

Commissioner Harry H. Jackson of the Department of Public Safety might now add the title of "admiral" to his name. He is in command of a fleet of four armed speed boats which are now plying the border waters between Ontario and Michigan. Their mission is to do away with the smuggling, principally of liquor, which has been such a heavy traffic in the narrow waters.

Inasmuch as Ecorse, in Wayne county, has been the receiving point for a very large share of the liquor slipped across the border, it will receive particular attention from the fleet both by day and by night.

Several smuggling vessels were picked up in the first week of operations of the fleet.

KNOCK A WHOLE ROW OF MAIL BOXES DOWN

A dozen rural mail boxes at the roadside near Memphis, Macomb County, were found knocked down one morning. Sergeant Frank Walker of the St. Clair detachment of the State Police found an automobile hub cap nearby. He searched the garages in Memphis until he found a car with a bent radiator and missing cap. Orville Kinsey was the owner and he pleaded guilty to destroying property and paid a fine of $50.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Religion and the Children

A noble, consecrated Christain woman, who not only in her own circle at Hillsboro, Ohio, but throughout the State is known and appreciated for her far reaching activities, has sent the following letter to the Christian Herald, which we lay before our readers with the request that they give it earnest consideration. It points the way to a solution of the great problem that is now uppermost in reflective minds—the spiritual education of the children, and the planting of the vital principals of the Christian faith in simple forms in their youthful minds.

But our correspondent's letter must speak for itself. She writes:

"I have been an appreciative reader of the Christian Herald for years, and have rejoiced in the many helpful movements it has promoted. Now I come to solicit your aid in what seems to me one of the truly deplorable conditions in the Church today: the absence of children and young people from the regular church service. Some years ago, we had Sunday school speakers who protested against the 'cruelty and hardship of children being required to sit through the church service. They talked of tingling nerves and tired muscles and urged that children be allowed to go home at the close of the Sunday school. May not this one thing have been largely responsible for the great apostasy of our young people? What pastor does not know the agony of seeing his audience dwindle away at the close of Sunday school, till he must deliver a carefully prepared sermon to a few middle-aged or old folks, and a number of empty pews? If the little folks go home, in many cases mother must go with them, or she doesn't come to church at all. And when once the children form the habit, they never come back to the 'good old way.' Our parents went to Sunday school and stayed for preaching or class; they revered and loved the humble, faithful men who brought them the Word of Life; and a wonderful crop of men and women grew up—as noble, strong and true as ever graced God's footstool....Let the Christian Herald sponsor a 'Stay for Church' campaign, and enlist Christian parents everywhere to unite in bringing our young people back to God, and training them for Christian life and service."

This touches a matter that relates to the well-being cf every household in America. We would be glad to have the letter quoted above read and discussed in every American home, and especially in homes where there are children of the susceptible age when impressions and convictions are most easily formed. Then, when the parents and grown-ups have considered the matter, let them write their conclusions briefly, and mail them to us for the enlightenmet of our Family Circle, addressing them to "The Child and the Church," Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y. And don't fail to submit the matter to your pastor, that he, too may include his judgment with the others.

THE CHURCH AND THE CHILDREN

The editorial in the issue of January 3, entitled "Religion and Children," invites comments from Christian Herald readers. Of course the children, at the earliest possible years, should acquire the "Stay for Church" habit in connection with their regular attendance.

What the child needs in latter life rather than what may interest the pupil at the time, is the determing factor on the part of the state in making the public school curriculum.

Further, church going can be made a delight for the child as well as for the youth. Parents and preachers are responsible for the accomplishment of this desirable attitude. In many cases the program of worship should be revised The fact is that frequently adults do not get any more from the service than do the children. Adults do not follow an anthem, the words of which can not be understood. An eight or ten minute prayer address would also be in harmony with the preliminary announcement, "Let us All pray." It is possible to so read the Scripture that children will listen eagerly.

The content of the sermon may also need revision. During the past thirty years the writer has had the privilege at times of observing both preachers and congregations while an occupant of the pews. Frequently there is a children's sermon, though even this too often has the adult audience in mind. Now I have never seen an adult asleep during the children's sermon, although I have many times seen adults sleep during the so called regular sermon. The point is that if more Bible facts and less subjective philosophy were preached, and all supported with pertinent illustrations that would hold the attention of the average fifteen year old child, much could be done to solve the problem of "Stay for Church."—Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Oh, For The Good Old Days!

Backward, turn backward, Oh, Time, in your flight,
I've got to go get a haircut tonight;
Take me again to the old barber shop
Where in a chair I could very soon hop.
I'm sick and tired of women I see
Waiting to get a haircut before me
I don't like modern shops, they are not right;
I want an old-fashioned barber tonight.

Gimme the days when the men, old and young,
Had an escape from the feminine tongue;
Where we found freedom our thoughts to express
While we played Seven Up, Checkers and Chess;
Where we could gather to cuss and discuss
Candidates, politics, wars and such fuss
That is all changed now, since women have bobbed;
Man of his very last sanctum they've robbed.

Many's the battle that's been fought and won;
Many's the race in the barbershop run;
Many elections have been settled here,
Waiting our turn in the old barber's chair.
Now the talk's changed to latest in clothes,
How long shall sleeves be and how short the hose;
So backward, turn backward, oh Time, in your flight,
Find me an old-fashioned barber tonight!

Say Norway Spruce Best Xmas Planting

Norway spruce are the best trees for plantings to raise Christmas tree stocks commercially, according to B. F. Kroodsma, forestry extension specialist at M. A. C. Great interest has been shown lately in evergreen nurseries to supply the Yule trade, as pressure is brought to bear to stop indiscriminate cutting of young forest trees.

That there is a chance for good profit in Christmas tree raising is shown by estimates of the M. A. C forestry department. Figures based on their experimental plantings place the earnings at $111. an acre per year. A profit of $200 an acre, under good conditions, is claimed by a prominent grower in Pennsylvania. Triangular planting three feet apart, gives 5,584 trees to the acre, according to Kroodsma A 4 by 4 foot spacing would require 2,723 trees to the acre. Four year old transplants are said to cost about fifteen dollars a thousand.

Farm Folk Gathered At M. A. C. Farm Week

Agricultural interests of Michigan are gathered at East Lansing this week, more than 30 different farm groups holding meeting and hundreds of other rural folk attending the general sessions of the big Farmers Week conference.

No estimate of the attendance figures were available yet in the middle of the week, but college authorities estimate that the 5,000 mark of recent years will be equaled or passed with good weather.

Agricultural exhibits and nationally known speakers on the general programs compete with each other for chief interest among the visitors. Women are holding a conference of their own, the Homemakers Section, with their own exhibits and meetings.

Local Rye Goes To South Africa Farm

Rosen Rye, Michigan's high producing variety and the strain which has won most of the rye awards at recent International Hay and Grain shows, will be planted a long way from its native state during the coming season. An order for seed from the famous variety has been received at the M. A C. from Hartebeestpoort Experiment Station, Brits Transvaal, South Africa.

J. E. Donkin, manager of the Hartesbeestpoort station, tried out a small sample of Rosen a year ago with such good results that he is running a large scale test this year. As a result, Rosen is likely to become a citizen, not only of Michigan and many other American states, but also of the world.

Climatic conditions in the section of the African continent where the rye will be planted are quite similar to those in Michigan according to H. C. Rather. crops specialist at M. A. C. and secretary of the Michigan Crop Improvement Association, who is filling the African order. The strikiag difference, of course, is that the seasons are just reversed in the southern continent. The seed order is being rushed because of the fact that the "fall" planting season at Hartebeestpoort is in April.

Rosen rye came orginally from Russia, a small sample being sent to the late Professor Frank A. Spragg, M. A. C. plant breeder, by a former M. A. C, student. After proving to be America's best rye, it now goes back to the other half of the world in search of new fields to conquer.

WOMAN'S COURAGE FOILS BANDITS

Grapples With Armed Robbers Who Attempt to Hold Up Her Bank.

UNARMED, WINS LONG FIGHT

One Bandit Killed and Other Wounded When Men Come to Rescue—Story Told at National Meeting of Bankers.

When the wave of crime against banks, which has reached unprecedented proportions, was under discussion at the recent meeting of the American Bankers Association at Chicago, and defense measures were up for consideration, the bankers were told how one resolute woman defended herself against two armed desperadoes in her little Western bank. The woman was Mrs. Mary Garlinghouse, cashier of the State Bank of Vera, Oklahoma, which she conducts singlehanded. Her own story, as she told it in a report to the protective authorities of the Association, follows:

"While I was posting my ledger, with my back to the door, I heard a commotion. When I turned around there were two men back of the counter, with handkerchiefs over their faces. The larger made a jump for my gun. before I realized what was happening. The robbers each had a gun pointed at me, and one said, 'Lay down or I will shoot you!' I said, 'I will not lay down and you will not shoot me.' This conversation was repeated several times. I told them to cut out their foolishness.

"A man who was in the corridor when the bandits came laid down on the floor, face down. I tried to argue with the robbers and they began to get rough, but something within me seemed to realize that they were getting confused. I kept thinking that some one would come in or see us.

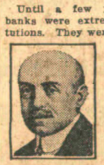
"The larger man got busy with the money, while the smaller one took care of me. He jerked me to my knees and hit me over the head. This jolted my glasses and I lifted my hand, waving it in front of his face and telling him to wait a minute. I took my glasses off and put them on the table. Lifting my hand caused this man to look up and he saw we were observed from across the street. Then he saw Constable Mosby, with his gun, and said to the man who was gathering the money, 'Don, we are seen, we must make our getaway!' He then grabbed me rather roughly said: 'Come on here! You are along!'

THE FRIENDLINESS OF MODERN BANKING

By WILLIAM E. KNOX

President American Bankers Association

Until a few years ago savings banks were extremely austere institutions. They were founded to do the kindliest thing in the world, that is, to take care of the savings of poor people, but they did it in a most repellent way. They did not extend to their banking business any of the courtesies or any of the amenities of life whatever. They simply took the money, did the depositor the favor of taking it, and gave it back to him when he wanted it. And then they considered their full duty done.



William E. Knox

The tellers and clerks treated the depositors as though they were entirely beneath them. I, myself, heard a depositor, an old Irishwoman, say to a teller who had been snappish with her: "Then you better keep a civil tongue in your head. It is the likes of me that keeps the likes of you in your place." In that brief and caustic and well-deserved comment she had summed up the whole situation in a nutshell.

There was nothing warm, nothing cordial, but as the years went by those who worked at the windows got on friendly and kindly relations with the people coming to the windows. Here and there some man got so close to the people that they began to tell him their personal affairs and ask for his advice, and of late years the banks, too, have been stressing the human element. They have struck a better way of approaching people.

They have taken steps, for instance, to try to get as close as they can to the foreign element. That is one of the great problems in all the large

"Dear Old Mother"

She had traveled many miles to spend a few weeks with her mother. She referred to her as "my aged mother, who is growing old and can no longer keep house as she used to keep it," adding with a trace of tears, "I cannot hope to have my mother very long now, so I let Jack and the boys manage the best they can—this is a duty that soon I may be unable to perform," says the Eldorado (Kans.) Times.

That was six years ago. Three weeks ago the aged mother, bedlamoned out of reason, with many frills and smiles, was one of the gayest souls on the Kafir Korn Karnival midway, dancing nimbly as a band played jazzily. She is a bride.

Teach your child Internal cleanliness

THE mother who permits constipation in her baby or older child is risking the health, even the life, of her little one.

Fretfulness, feverishness, night terrors, grinding the teeth in sleep, biliousness, coated tongue, loss of appetite, any of these may indicate constipation. Poisons from the child's stagnant intestine are flooding the little body, and if left unchecked may lead to serious consequences.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Let your infant or child have Nujol regularly, and see rosy cheeks, clear eyes and happiness return once more.

Nujol is used in children's and general hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Stone Tells Senators About Oil Conspiracy and the Senator Wheeler Case.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CONFIRMATION of the President's nomination of Attorney General Stone to be an associate justice of the United States Supreme court has been held up by the senate judiciary committee for many days and the rejection of Mr. Stone by the senate threatened, because he directed the presentation to the grand jury in the District of Columbia of evidence in a conspiracy case involving Senator Wheeler of Montana. Friends of Wheeler, both Democrats and insurgent Republicans, thought the case was that in which the Montana senator was indicted in his home state and that transfer of it to Washington savored of persecution.

Wednesday the attorney general went before the committee and explained that the government has uncovered a conspiracy of wide proportions to defraud the United States of oil lands, involving the attempted bribery of government officials; and as the alleged crime was committed in Washington, the indictment was sought there, in accordance with the law. Mr. Stone said he had ordered a fresh investigation of the matter in connection with which Wheeler was indicted in Montana, and added:

"The investigation indicated that Gordon Campbell's promotion schemes involved primarily the securing, fradulently, of oil and gas prospecting permits on public lands in Montana and that the most important element in them was the validating of these permits by the Interior department and the approval of assignments of these permits by the executive officers of the Interior department at Washington. These subsequent investigations changed entirely the aspect of the crime which seemed to have been committed in Montana."

The attorney general offered Senator Wheeler the privilege of testifying before the grand jury if he would waive immunity from prosecution for so doing.

This seemed to leave Mr. Stone's opponents no ground for further delay in approving the nomination, but the committee adjourned for several days. In the senate itself the controversy broke out once or twice, being checked by the presiding officer. Senator Heflin found an opportunity to tell again why he was opposed to the attorney general, rehearsing the case of Col. John Ownbey of Colorado against whom Mr. Stone once appeared before the Supreme court as counsel for the estate of J. P. Morgan. Senator Overman of North Carolina also supports the charges that Ownbey filed before the judiciary committee alleging that he was treated unfairly.

DEFEAT of the child labor amendment to the Constitution seems to be certain, but its friends have not yet given up hope. The amendment has been accepted by the legislatures of three states, Arkansas, Arizona and California, and by the lower house in New Mexico. Seven states have rejected it definitely, these being Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Delaware. In Ohio, Louisiana, North Dakota and South Dakota one house of the legislature has voted against it. A bill for a referendum was defeated in Massachusetts and in the Washington lower house. Wyoming has postponed action indefinitely, which amounts to rejection. It needs rejection by only 13 of the states to defeat the amendment.

Proponents of the amendment declared their belief that it would eventually be adopted by a sufficient number of states. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, said that the fight is by no means over and that he is confident that a sufficient number of states eventually will approve the amendment. He further charged that large sums of money had been expended in fighting the amendment and suggested a congressional investigation.

The National League of Women Voters also issued a statement declaring that adverse action by one or both houses of 13 states does not signify defeat. It was insisted that there is a possibility of reconsideration in some of the states.

MUSCLE SHOALS legislation was sent to conference and the prospects for the Underwood bill were bright, for the senate conferees appointed are all in favor of that measure. They are Keyes of New Hampshire, McKinley of Illinois and Kendrick of Wyoming. Norris, McNary and Smith had declined to serve. The house conferees are McKenzie of Illinois, Morin of Pennsylvania and Quin of Mississippi. The committee will try to obtain final enactment of the legislation before March 4.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, having received from his agricultural conference a report urging co-operative marketing legislation during the present session, called to the White House the Republican leaders of senate and house and the ranking members of the agricultural committees and asked them to try to carry out this recommendation. They promised to do their best. The report later was submitted to congress. The plan it presents contemplates the creation of a federal co-operative marketing board of five members, two of whom shall be the secretary of agriculture and the secretary of commerce and the three others to be appointed by the President after being nominated by federally registered co-operative marketing organizations. The salaries of the three appointed members would be $12,000 a year. The report declares it is the purpose of the plan to allow co-operatives a freedom to develop without governmental interference or domination, except for the police powers lodged with the secretary of agriculture under the Capper-Volstead act.

The agricultural conference also advocates adoption of the long pending resolution directing the interstate commerce commission to readjust freight rates so as to relieve farm products of a disproportionate share of transportation costs. The senate already had adopted the conference report on this resolution and it went to the President.

HERRIN, that bloody town in bloody Williamson county, Illinois, got on the front page again when Glenn Young, the klan liquor raider, and his chief foe, Deputy Sheriff Ora Thomas, "shot it out." Each was supported by a band of armed followers and when the smoke cleared away Young, Thomas and two others were lying dead on the street. Five more persons were wounded. The peaceful citizens of Herrin—there really are some—hope that with the death of the leading gun men the outbreaks that have brought notoriety to their town will never recur.

PREMIER HERRIOT of France has been preparing a definite statement on France's position concerning her debt to the United States, but at this writing it has not been made. M. Herriot, however, did say a lot on the subject in an address to the chamber of deputies. He said he would "solemnly repeat once more what M. Viviani has said, what M. Poincaire has said—France does not intend to repudiate her debts. It is not the government over which I preside, attached as it is to respect for treaties and conventions, that will disavow the principle of debts which France has contracted."

A little later he said: "Even from a commercial viewpoint, our friends cannot refuse to realize the terrible difficulties that France faces if she is forced to attempt to transport to England and America products to the value of the debts.

"The problem is not only moral but is economic and fiscal. Regardless of what happens no one can question our good faith. France is always loyal and will remain loyal on this question like on all others."

Much of M. Herriot's address was devoted to an exposure of Germany's failure to disarm in accordance with the terms of the treaty of Versailles. He made it clear that France is not contemplating any coercive measures but that she is determined to insure her security. "To disarm the hands of our enemies is not sufficient so long as their spirit is not disarmed," declared the premier. "At this very moment when it is desired to initiate industrial collaboration, there is a large group in Germany returning to war ideas as shown in their papers, their poetry, their plays, and their speeches, where France is treated disgracefully."

EMILE DAESCHNER, the new French ambassador, has arrived in Washington with his family and assumed the duties of his post. He called on President Coolidge Friday and presented his credentials. M. Jusserand, the retiring ambassador and long dean of the diplomatic corps in Washington, sailed for France. As he was leaving New York he said, as a private citizen: "I believe France should have more time for the payment of her debt. The first consideration should be France and all other issues should be subordinated. France has her reconstruction problem, which must be met. There are 140,000 homes to be constructed and as a result of lack of housing facilities there were during the last year 100,000 cases of tuberculosis, 18,000 resulting in death."

LEADERS in the international opium conference in Geneva decided on the creation of a central board to supervise the international traffic in narcotic drugs, the members to be appointed by the council of the League of Nations and the United States. This action is held significant of a possible way of arranging the future relations of the league and America and in the opinion of some it means the United States may become a sort of associate member of the league, with the understanding that it undertake no obligations under the covenant and would take no responsibility or pursue any activities in international political problems handled by the league.

FIFTY Russian mercenaries in four improvised armored cars arrived in Shanghai Wednesday, frightened off the defeated thousands of Chi Hsieh-yuan's army and took possession of the city for their employer, Marshal Lu Yung-hsiang. Two thousand of Lu's Chinese troops entered later and consolidated the victory, and Chi's soldiers fled or enlisted under Lu. Chi himself started for Japan and it is assumed there will be no more fighting in the Shanghai region. There are 25 foreign warships in the harbor protecting the foreign concessions, from which the Chinese and Russian troops are barred.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen, Canton government leader and first president of the Chinese republic, either is dead of cancer or has been operated on for that ailment and is in satisfactory condition. Both reports have been received and at this time the truth is not known. The Japanese official news agency at Tokyo says Peking is trying to keep Dr. Sun's death a secret.

DIPHTHERIA is epidemic in Nome, Alaska, and dog teams from Anchorage and Nenana, 600 miles away, are racing across the snow-covered country with supplies of antitoxin. Meanwhile the physicians in Nome have been forced to rely on serum that is at least six months old, and have found that it retains much of its curative power. Most of the deaths are among the Eskimos.

HERBERT H. ASQUITH, former prime minister of Great Britain, at last has accepted elevation to the peerage and has assumed the title of earl of Oxford. It was at first believed he would relinquish the active leadership of the Liberal party to Lloyd George, but he announced that he had not yet resigned that post.

YOUNG army officers have overthrown the junta government of Chile which was set up last fall by navy officers, and for a few days there was danger of civil warfare. Largely through the efforts of Agustin Edwards, former foreign minister, this has been averted and the officers have reached an agreement by which Arturo Alessandri, the self-exiled president, is recognized as constitutional president. He is in Italy but says he is ready to return to his country and his office. Dean Amunategui of the medical faculty of the University of Chile was commissioned to form a cabinet.

Baptists Called Upon to Raise Large Fund

Washington.—An absolute gift of $225,000 and a conditional gift of $450,000 by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., toward meeting the budget requirements of Northern Baptists for the fiscal year ending April 30 was announced at a meeting of Baptist denominational leaders, representing every state in the Northern Baptist convention, at a meeting at the Raleigh hotel.

To receive the maximum amount the denomination must by April 30 have raised the $6,700,000 which was the sum necessary to be paid in by church membership uuring the year to finance missionary and sundry other enterprises.

This means that four months are given to the denomination to raise $4,000,000 among church members and church friends.

Representatives of all Baptist mission societies and boards and members of the finance committee of the North convention attended the meeting in the oak room of the Raleigh hotel with H. R. Bond of Vermont presiding.

It was pointed out that not quite $3,000,000, or a bit more than 60 per cent, of the revenues for the corresponding period last year had been raised thus far toward the budget, reasons being given that the reaction from strenuous efforts during the new world movement closing last May 1 was being felt, particularly during the last few months.

Saw Nothing Else

These days of short dresses, sheer silk hose and up-to-the-minute styles make life miserable for many of the sterner sex. A sophomore at the university was reprimanding a frosh for not speaking when they passed. "Didn't see you," the freshman explained. "Why, I walked within a foot of you," the upper classman protested. "Gosh! You musta been the guy with the girl who had on those open-work stockings," replied the accused youth.—Columbus Dispatch.

Figures Show Retail Business of Country

Sixty million dollars a day is the average amount expended in retail stores by the American people, according to a study of the population's purchasing power made by the department of domestic distribution of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Retail business in the United States reached an estimated total of $21,947,638,923 last year, a per capita expenditure of $207.62 for food, clothing, furniture, fuel and light and miscellaneous commodities. More than a third of this amount, over $9,000,000, was spent in the Middle Atlantic and East North Central states.

On the basis of the department's estimates retail expenditures were greater for 1923 than for 1922 but considerably below the peak year of 1920. In that year, for example, the average expenditure for clothing was $74.70. Last year it was $48.03. The largest retail bill of the country is for food—$97.58 per capita.

This Test Shows
one big reason why "U.S." gives longer wear

FIVE times its length! It takes real rubber to stretch like that.

But that's what a strip of rubber cut from a "U.S." Walrus or Boot will do.

No higher quality rubber has ever been put into a rubber overshoe or boot—and that's one of the big reasons why the "U.S." brand gives longer wear.

Layer on layer of tough fabric reinforcements are anchored in this live rubber. They give rugged strength to stand the hardest knocks and strains.

Because of these important facts farmers in every section of the country are finding that "U.S." means longer wear and better service.

It will pay you to ask for "U.S." and get the longest wear your money can buy.

Other "U. S." Rubber Footwear

You'll find every kind of rubber footwear in the big "U.S." line. In addition to the "U.S." Walrus and "U.S." Boots—there's the "U.S." Lace Bootee, an all-rubber workshoe—and "U.S." Rubbers and Arctics for every member of the family. Look for the "U.S." Trade-mark whenever you buy.

We are in receipt of a handsome calendar from Patrick H. Crowley, President of the New York Central Lines, Grand Central Terminal, New York City. The calendar is reproduced from the painting of the "Twentieth Century Limited" the best known train in the world and the fastest. The officials tell us that these trains could even make more speed than they do, if safety first did not enter into consideration. The actual running time between Chicago and New York is now to be shortened by the "Castleton Cut-off" bridge in New York.

Mr. Daniel Garlinghouse of this village handed us a letter on Saturday that was quite ancient—in fact goes back to the days when we had no railroads and mail was carried by a post rider. The letter was written to David Garlinghouse, father of Daniel, who was a pioneer in Lenawee county way back in 1836 and the writer was his sister at Mt. Washington, New York. No envelope was used and the letter was folded into a very neat square and fastened with sealing wax. The letter was written on two sheets of foolscap paper and the address was written on the back. It was written before Daniel was born with a good quality of ink since it is distinct and not faded

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is used: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Nome and Kentucky Stage Dramatic Stories—Help for Chicago Drainage.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PUBLIC attention was centered on two events that, while not of great importance generally, were dramatic in the extreme and even agonizing. These were the heroic relief of diphtheria-stricken Nome by mushers and their dog teams carrying fresh supplies of antitoxin; and the trapping of Floyd Colins in Sand cave, in Kentucky, and the desperate efforts to extricate him.

The ice-bound Alaska town was attacked by an epidemic of diphtheria and its small supply of serum was soon exhausted. Appeals for more met with instant response, but the supply had to be sent across hundreds of miles of snow and ice-covered country. The best mushers of the north offered the services of themselves and their teams. Leonard Seppala with his champion dogs started the great relay race against death and made record-breaking time despite the extreme cold and the raging blizzard. He disregarded warnings not to cut across the breaking ice of Norton bay, and delivered the package of serum to Charlie Olson at Golofnin. Olson carried it to the village of Bluff, on the other side of Cape Nome from the town of Nome, and there he was met by Gunnar Kasson, who made the last lap of fifty-five miles under conditions that caused him to describe it as the toughest trip he ever had in his 21 years of experience as a musher. His malamutes—half wolf—were led by the famous Balto, who followed the trail unerringly though Kasson could not see his hand before his face. Gunnar passed through the villages of Solomon and Safety without stopping, unaware of the fact that relays were waiting there, and in the early morning hours the heroic driver and his great-hearted dogs dashed into Nome with the life-saving antitoxin. The people of America will not soon forget the relief of Nome and the gallantry of Seppala, Olson and Kasson and their dogs.

FLOYD COLLINS' plight in the Kentucky cave was so extraordinary and the week-long effort to extricate him was so frantic and from the beginning so apparently hopeless that every line of news from Cave City was read with avidity. The man was making his way through a long passage so narrow that there was barely room for his body, when a large boulder fell upon one of his feet, pinning him down. For 24 hours he struggled and called for help before he was discovered; and then it was speedily found that rescuers could not get at the boulder because Collins' body blocked the way completely. Hundreds of men gathered there and worked desperately, but necessarily one at a time, and meanwhile the trapped man was kept supplied with food. Mining engineers and surgeons were sent from cities as far distant as Chicago, and the state militia authorities took charge, but no one could devise a scheme for the liberation of the unfortunate man. Further shifting of the rock formation then caused the floor of the cave to rise in such a way that he seemed to be permanently entombed, and those in charge of the rescue work decided the only chance to reach him was by sinking a shaft from the top of the hill. It was admitted this would probably be fatal to Collins, but at this writing it is believed he already is dead. The new bulge in the rock floor had completely closed the passage not far from him and it was thought it might have crushed him. He had called faintly to his friends to "go home and go to bed."

CHICAGO sanitary district officials have made formal application to Secretary of War Weeks for authorization to withdraw 10,000 cubic feet of water a second from Lake Michigan through the drainage canal, and the War department will hold hearings on the matter shortly. Coincidentally, a special committee of the senate indorsed the construction and maintenance of a nine-foot channel in the Chicago drainage canal, Illinois and Mississippi rivers from Chicago to Cairo as a part of the lakes to the gulf waterway; justified Chicago's use of lake water for sanitation, and pronounced any lowering of lake levels less attributable to diversion from Lake Michigan at Chicago than to diversions at Niagara and other points on the lakes.

The Chicagoans told Mr. Weeks the sanitary district proposes to expend $130,112,000 for sewage treatment works within the next 30 years, but that even with the changes contemplated it will be necessary to have a flow of 10,000 cubic feet a second to safeguard the health of the people of Chicago. Not only must there be enough to dilute the sewage and trade wastes, but the flow of the Chicago river must be kept reversed. The proposed work in the district will call for such an increase of taxes that the per capita tax levy in Chicago will be 34 cents above the average per capita in all cities above 500,000 population.

AFTER a lively debate in open session, the senate confirmed the nomination of Attorney General Stone to be associate justice of the United States Supreme court. The vote was 71 to 6, those voting nay being Frazier, and Norris, Republicans; Heflin and Trammel, Democrats, and Johnson and Shipstead, Farmer-Laborites. Senator Wheeler and Senator Walsh of Montana refrained from voting. Walsh and Heflin made the chief speeches against confirmation, the former stressing Mr. Stone's action in connection with the Wheeler case, and the latter confining his attack to the so-called Ownbey case.

Senator Borah voted for confirmation but declared his opposition to the policy pursued by the attorney general in transferring the Wheeler matter to the District of Columbia, 2,500 miles from his own state. He said he would address the senate at a later date on the legal principles involved and possibly would recommend legislative action that would prevent the forcing of a defendant to stand trial in a strange community at the will of the attorney general.

THERE is a row among army and navy officers and officials in Washington which may result in the demotion of Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, assistant chief of the army air service, and the removal from his post of Rear Admiral W. A. Moffatt, chief of the navy bureau of aeronautics. Both of them, as well as other officers, have testified before the house committee on aircraft and are said to have been "too enthusiastic and progressive" to suit their superiors. Besides that they favor the creation of a separate department of aeronautics. Some of the committee members believed that officers were being "muzzled" to prevent frank testimony on the relative efficiency of aircraft in war. This was emphatically denied by Secretary of the Navy Wilbur. Secretary of War Weeks, however, called on General Mitchell to explain some of his statements to the committee, especially one that officers who gave testimony contrary to the views of superiors were likely to be disciplined. Mitchell also told the committee that American air power would not attain full development so long as it was made secondary to existing agencies, that everything in the army and navy was based on precedent, and that the trouble with the air service did not lie with the appropriating power.

MAINTAINING its prerogative to be the exclusive originator of revenue legislation, the house returned to the senate the postal pay and rate increase bill which the latter body passed. The house then took under consideration its own measure, resembling the senate bill in most respects but designed to produce more revenue to take care of the proposed increase of salaries of postal workers.

WHEAT prices, skyrocketing to over $2 a bushel in Chicago and to corresponding figures elsewhere, have aroused and alarmed the world. In various lands something like famine is predicted, and already in some places the price of bread has been advanced. Naturally the charge is made that the high price of wheat is due to manipulation by traders and that the farmer is reaping no profit from it. Senator Cameron of Arizona introduced a resolution calling for an investigation by the federal trade commission into alleged improper practices in manipulation of prices of wheat, flour and bread. An Illinois state senator lays the blame on the Grain Marketing corporation, which he calls a gigantic marketing monopoly, and has asked investigation of that concern by the legislature.

SECRETARY OF STATE HUGHES transmitted to the senate the official copy of the Paris reparations agreement, and with it went a repetition of his denial that the United States, by participating in the pact, had become unduly entangled in the affairs of Europe. He asserted the agreement neither surrenders nor modifies any treaty right of the United States, and that our participation in the conference was not in violation of the reservation attached by the senate to the treaty of Berlin. But the secretary made no mention of the alleged attempt of Ambassador Kellogg to attach a reservation to the agreement to the effect that the United States does not assume any responsibility for any part of the understandings, save that pertaining to payments to the United States. It was this especially that interested the "irreconcilable" senators.

Senator Hiram Johnson made a warm speech in the senate in which he combated the view of Mr. Hughes and declared loudly that America has become dangerously entangled in European affairs by the Paris pact.

TWO years in a federal penitentiary and $10,000 fine—that is the penalty that Col. Charles R. Forbes, former head of the veterans' bureau, and John W. Thompson, wealthy St. Louis contractor, must pay for conspiring to defraud the government on contracts for soldiers' hospitals, unless the verdict reached by a jury in Chicago is reversed by a higher court. The sentence was imposed by Federal Judge Carpenter and he denied a motion for a new trial. When Forbes' attorneys made a plea for mitigation of punishment based on his excellent war record, Judge Carpenter said: "You are offering evidence in aggravation of punishment—not mitigation. Because he was wounded and gassed does not entitle him to the privilege of coming back and betraying the buddies with whom he served."

Gaston B. Means, who was convicted in New York of conspiring to obstruct the course of justice, drew the same sentence as Forbes and Thompson; and his fellow defendant, T. B. Felder, was fined $10,000. It would be a great relief to the country if Means were safely behind the bars of the penitentiary.

GIACOMO DI MARTINO has been formally appointed Italian ambassador to the United States, and Prince Caetani, his predecessor, already has taken his departure from Washington. It is understood Martino will bring some concrete proposals for the settlement of Italy's war debt to America.

ONCE more the soviet rulers of Russia have made a great concession to the people. Premier Rykoff has announced the extension of amnesty to all those who during the civil war were identified with the anti-soviet armies of Deniken and Wrangell or who were connected with the counter-revolutionary movement. Rykoff said: "The past must be buried; we must lighten the labors of the people; we must forget all that occurred during the civil war; we must establish the electoral rights of the whole population."

TURKEY has expelled the patriarch of the Greek Catholic church from Constantinople and says other officials of that church will be sent out of the country. Greece is furious and talks of war, and officially proposes to lay the matter before the League of Nations. Turkey, however, maintains its action is not a violation of the treaty of Lausanne and is purely a domestic matter. There were riotous demonstrations in various Greek towns, and it was believed the affair would result in the fall of the cabinet.

ALBANIA seems to have settled down to peaceful conditions again, and Ahmed Zogu, the leader of the revolt that upset the government of Fan Nolli, has been elected president of the republic.

Belmont Fortune Said to Be Overestimated

New York.—Due partly to investment losses and partly to the establishment of trust funds in the later years of his life, the estate of the late August Belmont is not expected to net the beneficiaries more than $10,000,000, according to an estimate made by one of his close associates in the financial district.

This banker said that until the details of Mr. Belmont's security and other holdings become available nothing definite will be known, but the opinion prevails that early estimates, which ranged from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000, were too high.

One reason to account for the scaling down of the aggregate of the estate, according to opinion, is the belief that Mr. Belmont distributed a considerable portion before his death by establishing trust funds for members of his family.

Just after his sudden death persons intimately associated with him stood sponsor for estimates of his holdings that ranged from two to four times the sum now mentioned. So confident were they that he was a man of many millions that when his will was filed there was some comment on the fact that there were no public benefactions and no very great provision for the widow. The latter fact was not interpreted as a sign that the Belmont fortune had shrunk, but rather was taken to mean that the financier had made ample antemortem provisions for his wife.

Letters Like This Prove the Reliability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Turtle Lake, Wisconsin.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness, backache and nervousness. I had these troubles for years and had taken other medicines for them, but I have found no medicine so good as the Vegetable Compound and I recommend it to my friends who have troubles similar to mine. I saw it advertised and thought I would try it and it has helped me in all my troubles. I have had six children and I have taken the Lydia E. Pinkham Vegetable Compound before each one was born, for weakness, vomiting, poor appetite and backache, and again after childbirth because of dizzy headaches. It is a good medicine for it always helps me. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for the last eight years for constipation." — Mrs. MABEL LA POINT, R. F. D. Michigan Happenings

Claiming that it had been forced to pay $10,077 in excess of the proper amount of its county taxes, the Packard Motor Car company filed suit against Wayne county for the recovery of that amount. In its bill the company declares that its taxable property amounts to $3,273,145 and that its non-taxable property is valued at $10,784,116. It is further explained that the liabilities of the company equal its non-taxable property, but that the assessors, in arriving at the amount upon which the company was to pay tax ignored these facts.

The State of Michigan's second receivership action against the House of David colony at Benton Harbor has been dismissed in Circuit Court at St. Joseph. The court's action was taken upon motion of counsel for the defense.

"Well, that's better than nothin'. Fork it over."

Slim hesitated a moment and then asked:

"During 60 years of Married Life"—

Three Generations Kept Healthy and Happy

"Beecham's Pills were always considered indispensable by my parents during sixty years of married life and I am never without them in my home, as they are used when required by myself (aged sixty-one), and wife and children. This covers a period of over eighty years.

My wife and sons also believe there is no remedy for constipation and biliousness equal to Beecham's Pills.

So many so-called "cures" for biliousness and kindred troubles leave after effects that are certainly injurious, but Beecham's Pills give prompt relief and leave one in a healthy and happy condition." N. J. M.

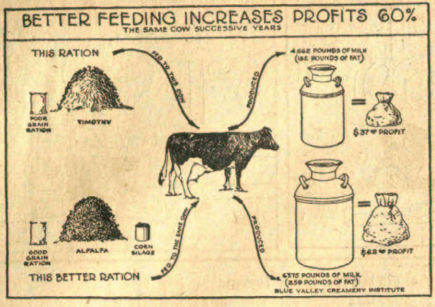
$500,000,000 Gain by Better Feed



BLUE VALLEY CREAMERY INSTITUTE

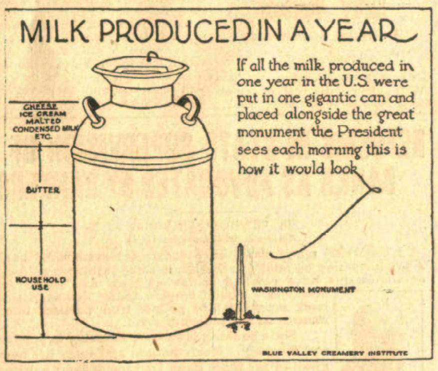
OVER $500,000,000 extra profit can be made each year by dairy farmers through the employment of better feeding methods. This would mean a saving of about $111 for each of the four and a half million dairy farmers of the United States, according to the Blue Valley Creamery institute. The truth of this experiment is borne out by a feeding experiment carried on during the past year by the University of Minnesota.

Over a year ago the dairy division of the university purchased four average cows for which records were available of feed received, and of milk and fat produced, covering two years for each cow. The cows received good care on the farm of the original owner but were not on a scientific feeding ration. The university immediately placed the cows on a feeding ration suitable for their needs. Within a year production per cow had increased 36.7 per cent.

On the farm of the original owner the cows produced on the average of 4,662 pounds of milk containing 182 pounds of fat, the products per cow amounting to around $87.36. The feed cost totaled $49.46, leaving a profit of $37.90. At the university farm the average production was 6,375 pounds of milk, containing 259 pounds of butter fat and valued at $124.32. The average feeding cost per cow was $61.42, an increase of 24 per cent, leaving a profit per cow of $62.90. The returns over feed cost per cow gained 60 per cent over those of the two previous years.

On the owner's farm the cows were on pasture six months of the year and were fed timothy hay for roughage, plus five pounds per day of a grain mixture made up of 90 parts bran, 80 parts middling, 18 parts molasses feed, and 4 parts oilmeal. At the university farm the cows were on pasture 5 months of the year. They were fed corn silage and alfalfa hay as roughage, plus a grain ration, according to production, made up of oats, 2 parts, corn, 1 part, and barley, 1 part.

At the most, not more than 5,000,000 dairy cows are on proper feeding rations, the Creamery institute believes. There are at least 20,000,000 average cows in the United States, they say, from which an added profit of $25 per year could be had by proper feeding.



MILK PRODUCED IN A YEAR
If all the milk produced in one year in the U.S. were put in one gigantic can and placed alongside the great monument the President sees each morning this is how it would look
CHEESE ICE CREAM MALTED CONDENSED MILK ETC.

HOUSEHOLD USE
WASHINGTON MONUMENT

BLUE VALLEY CREAMERY INSTITUTE

IF ALL the milk in the United States last year was put into one gigantic can a thousand feet in diameter, it would reach almost half a mile into the clouds, being more than four times the height of the Washington monument at the national capital, according to the Blue Valley Creamery institute. The can would tower 2,009 feet in height, while the Washington monument is only 500 feet high.

Into the American milk can annually goes 11,925,252,441 gallons of white gold, valued at $2,566,000,000, the daily milkings of 24,675,000 cows. If the can was emptied, it would make a river five feet deep and twenty feet wide, extending 3,775 miles in length.

Ray is Boon To Physicians

What is expected to afford considerable aid to physicians and surgeons in the future is the invention recently perfected in the physics department of the University of Michigan. The "micro-ammeter" which will measure the degree of intensity of X-rays being used on patients, was recently given to the world by Roy Kegerreis, an instructor in the physics department.

The uncertainty coincident with the use of the X-ray, which doctors are experiencing today will be entirely abolished, according to Mr. Kegerreis. The instrument is already in use by several physicians and surgeons. Mr. Kegerreis has demonstrated the use of the "micro ammeter" before the Radiological Society of America, which convened recently in Kansas City, Missouri.

Deny U of M Mining Lands Worth $10,000,000

Denial of recently published statements that University of Michigan mining lands in Algoma, Ontario, are "worth $10,000,000 has been made by university administrative officials. A thorough check on the valuation of all university property is kept, it was asserted, and no such purported valuation has been made known to the Board of Regents.

The land, which is a part of the Garden River Indian reserve, was given to the University on March 25, 1905, by George N. Brady of Detroit, and Thomas Whittier of Saginaw. who were associated with the late Senator Thomas W. Palmer. These men owned a controlling interest in the land syndicate that originally acquired the property and they, seeing no prospect of working the land during their generation, gave it to the University.

New Equipment Gives Michigan Lead In Astronomy

Students of astronomy at the University of Michigan are viewing with considerable interest the plans which are being considered for the improvement of means for the study of this important science The old observatory, which even now is known about the world, is to be deserted and the two huge telescopes will be moved to the top floor of the new Literary building.

Provisions have been made for the erection of two domes on the top of the new structure, and plans are being put forward for the manufacture of two 12 inch telescopes for the use of students of astronomy. In the opinion of Prof. W. J. Hussey, director of the observatory, Michigan will rank second to none among the institutions furnishing accomodations for the study of the science of astronomy, following the completion of the contemplated improvements.

It is Prof. Hussey, who is also the father of the idea to construct a more complete astro-physical observatory some distance outside the city of Ann Arbor. Plans for the building are being considered, the purpose being to provide a location where the city lights will not interfere with the observations made near the plane of the horizon

The proposed structure would be practically for the exclusive use of the faculty of the department, and would house 37 inch and 23 inch refracting telescopes, a meridian circle and the numerous other instruments essential to the study of astronomy.

Good Weather Marks Farm Week Meetings

The weather man chose to deal leniently with visitors at M. A. C.'s annual Farmers Week this year, serving up bright, sunny days most of the week. As a result, what is estimated as the largest crowd in the history of the big winter conference at East Lansing gathered for the various meetings from Feb. 2 to 6.

From Monday noon, when the first of the associations began group meetings, until Friday, when the Farm Bureau and the Michigan Press Association lingered over for the final chapter, the week was full of events of interest.

With more than 30 association meetings, a half dozen special exhibits buildings, daily afternoon and evening programs of general interest to the whole list of guests and various special entertainment features sandwiched in between, the Farmers Week list of events proved too complex to permit of complete recounting.

No one visitor could take in more than a small percentage of the activities scheduled. It was a case of "pick and choose", with plenty of variety on the bill of fare.

Among the many prominent speakers who addressed the general meetings were: Dr. Williams Evans, health editor, Chicago Tribune; Hon. John C. Ketchum; Bishop Francis J. McConnell; S. Parkes Cadman, of New York; Huston Thompson, chairman Federal Trade Commission; President Kenyon L. Butterfield, of M. A. C.; L. Whitney Watkins and Mrs. Dora Stockman, state board of agriculture, any many others.

Community development proved a central theme for many of the addresses, the idea of family life settlement in the rural districts standing out throngh most of the general meetings.

S. Glenn Young Master of Herrin

The Advocate came out the week of January 30th with a writeup of the murdering affair at Herrin Illinois wherein four men offered up their lives as a tribute to the feuds which have been running there for some time since the shooting of a few miners who were most shamefully disposed of. In our article we made several typographical errors and also omitted some things which we meant to say. In speaking of S. Glenn Young we referred to him as a notorious "bootlegger" whereas we meant to say he was the undoing of notorious bootleggers. Some people here have mentioned the oversight to us and in view of it we decided the K. K. K. deserved an apology for the blunder.

We find upon investigation that Mr. Young was the most thoroughly red blooded American ever behind an official badge. He was interviewed while lying in bed after one shooting affray at Herrin with the opposing faction in which he was wounded and his young wife lost her eyesight following the incident. Mr. Young was born in Dodge City Kansas when that country was a part of the wild and woolly west. His father put him through high school and that was the end of his educational career as regards himself but the beginning of his tutoring the semi savages of the west who were booze toters and law breakers generally. He grew up under the eye of Bill Cody(Buffalo Bill) and Bill Hickok became an officer, and so well did he function that at the age of 21 years he landed in Kentucky as a deputy marshal and made a practice of going into the mountains single handed and always returning with his man. The natives of the region were a grizzly set and desperate to a finish but that made no difference to Young. He had been working this sort of racket for several years when he was sent to Illinois by the prohibition enforcement department. He had made himself a fearless Juggernaut to the law breakers. When Glenn Young was in authority it was useless for them to try to escape. His history begins at bloody Herrin just after the shooting affray of July 22, 1922 wherein twenty two Non union men were butchered by the followers of the Union Labor party. When Young came to blood cursed Herrin, law and order had flown out and rebellion and general disregard of decency were the rule.

Mr. Young made this statement:

"I worked in the Blue Ridge Mountains for sixteen years and came to know them like a book. I knew most of the inhabitants and knew they were illicit distillers but I generally had their respect. We fell on Herrin in the night. We raided the dives and in one night arrested 150 men. During the next two weeks we rounded up 500 prisoners. We tried most of them and convictions followed."

Whatever may be said of S. Glenn Young he was a man to be feared and in him the state rested her case. A man absolutely without fear he went about his duties as cheerfully as though he were celebrating July 4th. and it is likely that never again will the prohibition party get an officer of his stripe. He was known as the liquor raider. The bitterest trial of his life probably was to think his pretty young wife must suffer the consequences and go through life stone blind from the shots of a desperate thug or booze fighter. No doubt Mrs. Young will be well taken care of by the government in remembrance of the great work performed by her late husband. Young was asked if the prohibition laws were responsible for so much evasion He replied:

"Nothing to it." The answer was prompt. "Long before we had prohibition I was noticing the low attitude people were assuming toward law, all law. Kansas was dry when I was a boy, and had no capitol punishment. Everybody knows about Kansas' fine record.

"Prohibition laws are trifled with in a country that is dry by instinct. Why? There are two reasons, and the second springs from the first. Ninety percent of the field jobs are political; too mauy of the outside men are petty grafters and cowards, and picked not for fitness but for the votes they can drum up. The place to enforce any law is right where it is being broken.

"You can't do it in Washington with clerks writing reports. Men won't take that sort of thing seriously. It arouses contempt and a disposition on the part of men whom you would call honest to shield lawbreakers. Prohibition ought to be enforced to the letter, regardless of cost. Dry up the country and you will dry up crime. Keep liquor away from the present generation, and the next generation won't know the taste of it. That's old stuff, but it's true.

"But the big thing is to enforce all law. You can't do it unless you bring back old time respect for the man behind the badge. You can't do that unless he is entitled to respect."

Weekly Press Men Hold Annual Meet

The Michigan Press Association organization of weekly newspaper publishers of the state, held its annual meeting at East Lansing Feb. 5, 6 and 7, with the largest attendance in the history of the organization. One hundred editors of leading town papers, scattered all over Michigan, gathered for the conference.

Outstanding on a program full of interesting and useful addresses were talks given by Fred W. Anderson "Miracle Merchant" of Cozad, Nebraska; and Ole Buck, Field Director, Nebraska Press Association. These men, appearing on the afternoon and evening sessions Friday, loaded the newspaper men with live tips on merchandising in general and running a home town newspaper in particular.

Officers of the Press Association who had served during the past year were all unanimously re-elected for the 1925-26 period. David Hubbell, Crosswell Jeffersonian, president; Schuyler Marshall, Clinton County Republican News, St. Johns, vice-president: Herbert A. Wood, Bangor Advance, treasurer; and Len W. Feighner, Nashville News, field director, constitute the list of executive officers.

Preliminary steps leading to a more definite form of organization of Michigan weekly home town papers, under the Press Association, were taken at the meeting. A full time field secretary to aid in developing a powerful state wide unit was proposed.

Obligations and opportunities of the home town paper as a community leader and community builder were stressed in all of the sessions of the conference, along with the more technical side of newspaper building.

YOUNG FARMER PLEADS GUILTY

STATE DETECTIVE UNCOVERS CONCLUSIVE PROOF OF MURDER OF WIFE

When Ralph Lindsley, a young farmer of St. Joseph county, pleaded guilty in circuit court to the murder of his wife, he admitted the facts which had been disclosed by unusual detective work.

One morning Lindsley drove into Sturgis and reported to the chief of police that Mrs. Lindsley had committed suicide by shooting herself. The coroner and other officials found the woman's body lying in a pool of blood, with a bullet wound in the forehead, and a revolver lying close by.

H. Erickson of the state Bureau of Identification was sent for and took a complete set of photographs, also taking the finger-prints found upon the revolver barrel. Lieutenant John S. Palmer, in charge of the criminal investigation bureau of the Department of Public Safety then took the case.

Tests were made with the revolver which showed that the woman could not have shot herself, inasmuch as powder burns were lacking which would have occurred if she had held the gun.

In seeking a clue to the motive for the killing, Lieutenant Palmer learned that Lindsley had been attentive to a young married woman of the neighborhood. Search was made and the fragments of a 16-page letter, which had been read and torn up and the pieces thrown away, were gathered. It took a day and a night to put the letter together and then the motive was plain.

Lindsley had planned to get rid of his wife and also of the other woman's husband, it appeared.

Finger prints of the revolver and measurements showing the direction of the bullet and approximate fixing of the height fro mwhich it was fired were other details entering into the case.

Finally, the burden of evidence being too strong to be overcome, Lindsley came into court and pleaded guilty. He is now serving his sentence in Jackson prison.

MICHIGAN HAS NAVY ON DETROIT RIVER

Commissioner Harry H. Jackson of the Department of Public Safety might now add the title of "admiral" to his name. He is in command of a fleet of four armed speed boats which are now plying the border waters between Ontario and Michigan. Their mission is to do away with the smuggling, principally of liquor, which has been such a heavy traffic in the narrow waters.

Inasmuch as Ecorse, in Wayne county, has been the receiving point for a very large share of the liquor slipped across the border, it will receive particular attention from the fleet both by day and by night.

Several smuggling vessels were picked up in the first week of operations of the fleet.

KNOCK A WHOLE ROW OF MAIL BOXES DOWN

A dozen rural mail boxes at the roadside near Memphis, Macomb County, were found knocked down one morning. Sergeant Frank Walker of the St. Clair detachment of the State Police found an automobile hub cap nearby. He searched the garages in Memphis until he found a car with a bent radiator and missing cap. Orville Kinsey was the owner and he pleaded guilty to destroying property and paid a fine of $50.

Religion in the Home

We rejoice in the spread of the Family Altar in the homes of America. It is doing a great and blessed work—one that is worthy of a welcome in every home in our land. Religion in the homes means not only the spiritual uplift of parents and children; it is one of the most direct and assured means of making the rising generation God-fearing and Christ-loving men and women, fit to take their proper place as Christian citizens of a great nation.

Sometime ago President Coolidge wrote this memorable sentence:

"It is not in brilliant conceptions and strokes of genius that we shall find the chief reliance of our country, but in the Home, in the School and in Religion.

The President was absolutely right! Had he written a hundred pages, he could not have stated this one vital truth any better than he did in this single sentence. It should be framed and set up in every church, and public school, and in all the homes of America.

More than ten years have passed since the Christian Herald began the publication of the Daily Meditation. This was the forerunner of the Family Altar, with its little Home Service modelled on a pattern so simple that it could readily be introduced in any home. Its growth has far exceeded our anticipations. Today—in all States—in cities, towns, villages and hamlets—The Family Altar is doing its hallowed work, and its numbers are constantly increasing. Pastors of practically every denomination are rallying to its support, and religious organizations are giving it the strongest possible advocacy. In a little folder just issued by the Layman's League of Pennsylvania (headquarters in Philadelphia) we find a warm advocacy of the Home Service: "A Family Altar in your Home," it declares, "will largely determine the eternal salvation of your children. A Family Altar in your Home will send you forth to your daily tasks with a cheerful heart, stronger for work, truer to duty, and more determined to glorify God."

At this critical time, when the problem of placing the rising generation upon a solid religious foundation is demanding nation wide attention, there is no crusade so full of spiritual promise for the churches as that to set up the Family Altar, not only in the homes of church members themselves, but wherever the influence of their example can reach.

There is no other feature in the field of religious effort today of equal importance with this. The Christian Herald believes that untold blessing awaits all who aid in kindling the spirit of Christian worship in the hearts and homes of our people, and especially in wining the young.

More Latitude

Some of our highly polished "intellectuals" maintain that the young people should have a wider latitude in which to express themselves In a few cases only this might be true but in the vast majority of instances it would be a curse to humanity.

A few months ago we were at a home not a hundred miles from North Adams where the father is rated as a mighty "good fellow" a member of several lodges, and the mother is a social bud—that is, she has budded and blossomed out as a club leader, works at church work a lot, and attends most of the Ladies' Aid meetings, and we noted the extreme latitude of the children in that family. Pa and Ma just simply had to go back and sit down for "Johnnie" aged 14, apparently the spokesman of the entire family. For instance something was said about rounding up the 4th of July celebrators who are in the festive habit of exploding firecrackers and torpedoes in close proximity to aged and infirm persons just to see them "jump" and going after the hunters who prey upon quail and rabbits out of season. Johnnie put in his remarks quite fluently to the effect that all young people were being boycotted in a terribly trying way. They couldn't do this and they couldn't do that without being booted and cuffed about, and as for him he was going to have a lot of fun next 4th whether the law said so or not, to all of which his Ma very cleverly assented. It was easy to see that Johnnie was a spoiled lad—in fact badly decomposed in his ideas. He had his own particular way in everything, and woe be unto the teachers in school or the demagog who would interfere—both Pa and Ma rose on their hind legs and said "nix." We harked back a year or two when the boy clashed with his teachers in High School because he would chew gum in sessions and leave the room just before class period, whence he never returned promptly. Result—several severe punishments and final dismissal from school. Pa was too busy to interfere and Ma thought her son far too cute to need such discipline

In the same family, Jane, aged 18, also suffered from too narrow latitude. She began with Ma's knowledge and consent, at the ripe age of 13, to entertain beaus, and so at 18 years she was simply a gum-chewing, bobbed flapper well versed in the arts and sciences, an expert vamp and disgustingly rude. Pa had several times objected to Jane attending dances with various pick-ups, not her age, and decidedly risque. Ma remembered her own escapades and warned her daughter 'only to be careful." Under the circumstances even a blind person could see that the extremely small latitude was killing Jane.

She was not an own daughter but had been adopted by the doting foster parents and her every desire's gratification was their hobby. If she wanted another silk dress, she got it. Jewelry she was simply burdened with. As to real housekeeping Jane knew not how to "boil water" at least she had never been allowed to try, as Ma always contended work was bad enough for those who had to do it and Jane should not be introduced to such menial tasks as dish-washing, sweeping and the like.

Well, matters kept progressing backward for Jane, because her latitude and longitude weren't broad enough, doncher know!

One evening she accepted the company of a young man slightly older than herself to a dance in a neighboring village. The dance was not what you would call exclusive. Most of the cement workers from a nearby plant drifted in together with a bunch of beet weeders and all kinds of steps were indulged in. At 2:00 a. m. in the morning after dancing every set but one, the entire evening, Jane and her beau set out for home in a big touring car, accompanied by one other couple. Although in June and quite warm, the side curtains were on and most of the time they drove without lights, as the moon was up. After going two miles the girls suggested it would be grand sport to visit a road house a few miles the other side of X——— and show the natives a real time.

They turned the car and went to the road house a place where liquor could be obtained. And to make a long story short the entire party left the road house at a little before daylight much the worse for liquor. The girls had smoked a few cigarettes "just for fun" and there was a flask or two of the vile concoction in the car. Driving at forty miles per hour without lights they met a mounted patrol of state police not far from home. Of course the officer wanted to know why a big car was driving at that time in the morning without lights. Result the entire party arrested and considerable litigation required to explain it all away. After that Ma was skeptical about Jane's latitude and one day ventured to remark that such doings for a young girl were scandalous. This caused the foster daughter to fly completely off the handle and the language she indulged in because her latitude was threatened, would have shocked a horse thief. At present the daughter is growing quite popular, Johnnie is trying his hand at seven up with the boys, and if we mistake not his latitude will be well rounded out in the course of a year or so—that is if he remains out of the penitentiary.

The foregoing is absolutely true as far as the happenings are concerned, except that "Jane" isn't Jane at all. and "Johnnie" might be George or Frank or Pete, but he's none of these. It is possible with a little trimming, and some changing to fit Jane and Johnnie's characteristics over people nearer home but we are a little fearful the story might prove irksome.

REFORMS IN STATE SUPERVISION OF BANKS AS ADVOCATED BY BANKERS

By FRANK W. SIMMONDS
American Bankers Association

ALTHOUGH many states have unexcelled systems of bank supervision by public authority, in some instances political entanglements have resulted in lax methods and dangerous practices. Public opinion today demands that bank supervision be as free from partisan interference as the judiciary itself.

Frank W. Simmonds

State banking laws are increasing in number and diversity. Much thought and study has been given by the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association to uniformly efficient supervision. It is on record as urging that the office of Bank Commissioner be freed from entangling politics and divorced from all other functions of state government; that the tenure of office be made more secure and lasting, with sufficient compensation and discretionary power to attract men of outstanding executive ability and successful banking experience, and that bank examiners be selected from those having the requisite qualifications.

A careful study and survey of state bank supervision has been made with the cooperation of State Bank Commissioners and state bankers to bring out the high lights of successful supervision, and at the same time indicate remediable weaknesses, as the basis for formulating a model code of law dealing with bank supervision, and also for developing public opinion in favor of its general adoption.

This survey shows that in forty-one states Bank Commissioners are appointed by the governors and generally hold office "during their pleasure." In two states they are chosen by popular election, in others they are chosen by a banking board, but in only a few is the advice of organized banking considered. In Mississippi the selection is made by a convention of delegates from the state chartered banks.

Long Terms Make Bureaucrats

The term of office was found to range from two years to six. The majority of recommendations favor a five-year term, reasoning that a long term of life tenure tended toward bureaucracy in office, while a short term was condemned on the grounds that the Bank Commissioner would scarcely have time to become thoroughly conversant with his field of work before the expiration of his term of service and the public would lose the fruits of his experience. A five year term is long enough to permit his rendering useful service through capitalizing his experience and then if he is found capable the chances of his reappointment would be strong.

It was found that duties other than bank supervision are frequently imposed on the banking department, ranging from insurance matters to irrigation projects and even state hail insurance. The almost unanimous expression of opinion is that the position of bank commissioner is a task of such outstanding importance as to demand that he devote all his time and attention strictly to problems of bank supervision and regulation.

Some states impose no statutory qualifications whatever for Bank Commissioner. A number merely require that he have nominal qualifications, in many cases purely negative. Only twenty states require actual banking experience varying from one to five years.

Powers of Bank Commissioners

In the majority of states, the Bank Commissioner is given more or less power to approve or deny applications for charters of state banks. Clearly this authority should be exercised chiefly with a view to supplying each community with safe, adequate banking facilities. Hence the importance of carefully weighing all factors involved such as the character and responsibility of the organizers and the community's needs for banking facilities. In the very nature of things no one is so well qualified to pass on charter questions as the Bank Commissioner. Comments from all states favor granting the banking department large if not absolute jurisdiction in granting bank charters.

A number of states now confer more or less complete authority on the state banking department to act as receiver in liquidating failed banks, usually providing that the Bank Commissioner must file a report with the court for approval. In other states the court names a receiver and the Bank Commissioner thereafter has no jurisdiction or authority. The almost unanimous opinion of bankers and the Bank Commissioners is that authority should be placed in the banking department as it permits the employment of experienced bank administrators in winding up the affairs of a bank, is more expedient, economical and altogether more satisfactory.

Changes Needed

The consensus as to changes needed to strengthen the work of the state banking departments is summarized in the following recommendations:

1. Provide adequate salaries.
2. Give Bank Commissioner large discretionary power in granting charters and enforcing bank regulations.
3. Remove the office from partisan politics by providing for election or nomination of the Commissioners by the bankers.
4. Provide for a sufficient number of examiners, with adequate pay, and free their appointment from politics.
5. Give the Banking Department full authority to act as receiver in the case of failed banks.
6. Make Bank Commissioners' terms five years.
7. Make requirements for Bank Commissioner eligibility not less than five years of successful banking experience and well recognized executive ability.

Bank supervision, when wisely and impartially administered, is capable of rendering one of the highest types of service a state can give its peor

New York Telephones Kept Reasonably Busy

The statement that New York city has more telephones than the whole of [illegible] Britain conveys a vivid pictu[illegible] the number of instruments there must be in the city. Many people, especially foreigners unused to the telephone as a daily necess[illegible] may have wondered to what exte[illegible] large number of telephones, [illegible] a million, are used, says [illegible] Service.

A recent statement by H. A. Trax, chief accountant of the New York Telephone company, throws some light on the question. During the year 1923 an average of more than 18,570 toll or long-distance calls every day kept New Yorkers in close touch with the rest of the country, while at the present time the total number of calls, local and long distance, in the city averages 6,200,000 every day. In other words, every telephone in New York city is used on an average about five times every day.

Skull Shows Skill of Indian Surgeon

Evidence that skull surgery was successfully practiced by prehistoric people in Michigan has been presented to the American Association for the Advancement of Science by Prof. E. F. Greenman of the University of Michigan. Pointing out that Michigan has been greatly neglected as a field for archeological investigation, he said:

"In Alpena county, Michigan, several trephined skulls, that is, skulls into which holes were drilled during the life of the patient, have been reported. One of them is in the University of Michigan museum and careful examination of anatomists of repute shows that a healing had begun after the operation and therefore the area of the practice of skull trephining must be extended far beyond Mexico."

MYERS

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him.

"You're a fool! You don't know when you are well off. I tell you, I wash my hands of you. This is final—"

Joan could not help but hear. And as she emerged into the passage, all the time hearing the sounds of the quarreling voices, Myers came hurrying past.

He did not see her. He ran to the door, flung it open, and rushed down the steps into the street. As he went along the passage the girl saw him staring right and left; then, as she came out, he saw her and went toward her. She knew that it was she whom he had been seeking.

"What was it Doctor Lancaster was saying to you, Miss Wentworth, before I came in?" he asked in his rasping tone.

Joan stared at him in astonishment. Now she realized that she had mistaken him; he was not a servant, but apparently a member of the doctor's household.

"Will you let me pass, please?" asked Joan, as he blocked the way.

"I want to know what the doctor was saying to you," repeated the man doggedly.

"Are you going to refuse me passage?" demanded the girl, flushing with anger.

He stepped aside with a sneer and a mock bow. "O, very wel., if that's your attitude," he answered. "I shall find out."

Joan turned swiftly upon him. "I don't know who you are, but I shall complain of you to Doctor Lancaster," she said.

Myers looked at her and sneered and chuckled. Then, without a word, he went back into the doctor's room. And still the voices kept up their quarreling dialogue.

Joan found herself in the street in the twilight, and now the unreality of the absurd interview struck home to her. She tried to puzzle it out. Before she reached the boarding house she thought she had her clue.

That Lancaster, the terror of the nurses, should have been unable to promise immediate reinstatement, his evident good-will, his indecision and illness were explicable only in one way. The man Myers must be a relative, the third man perhaps a nephew. Lancaster had been supporting a worthless pair in idleness, and had turned on them in exasperation. That was the meaning of his look of illness, his preoccupation—the shock of some domestic discovery.

At any rate she was satisfied with some such solution. And she was certain that, if she pleased him with her mysterious mission, her reinstatement would follow. She went home happy, and Mrs. Webb read the news in her face the moment she opened the door.

"I knew it, my dear," she exclaimed with pleasure. "I knew that you could twist that old devil round your finger if you tried hard enough."

"Mrs. Webb, it was nothing of the kind," said Joan. "And Doctor Lancaster is one of the kindest of men. He's going to try to have his decision reversed, and—Mrs. Webb, he is sending me to a sanitarium, on a case, in the meantime."

She checked herself, suddenly remembering Lancaster's caution. But Mrs. Webb took the girl to her wide bosom and kissed her.

"You little humbug!" she said.

"Mrs. Webb," cried Joan, scandalized, "if you knew—"

But when she was upstairs she sat down suddenly and faced her conscience. What impression of herself had she given in the consulting room?

She did not know. This scene, like that of the morning, had become blurred in her memory, and time had begun to flow very fast after the slowness of her twenty-two years. Certainly stranger things had happened that day than at any time since her mother's death!

She leaned out of the window. She suddenly remembered that the institute was not many miles from her old home. It would be almost going home —and on the morrow. Joy leaped into her heart.

Then she saw something that for an instant chilled the blood in her veins. Across the street, leaning against the park railings and looking up at the house, was a short, square-built figure of a man wearing a hard hat. She could not distinguish the face, but she thought it was Myers. And she remembered his threat.

What did it mean? Bewildered, she turned into her room again. She half regretted now that she was to go to Lancaster.

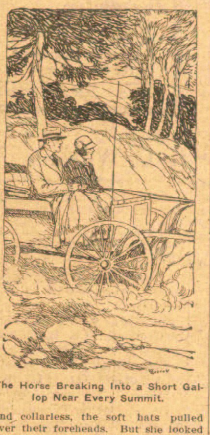
But in the morning she dismissed the incident from her mind as a fantasy.

Chapter IV

At half-past seven in the evening Joan descended from the train at Lancaster station, after an all-day ride.

It was like going home. Joan could not see her village, which was on a branch line, but at Medlington she was only four miles away. There were the same misty mountains, breaking the horizon line, the same small, straggling towns, the same fragrance of the deep forests, bringing back to her those remembrances which a chance odor suddenly unlooses, as at the touch of some magician's stave. The two years that she had spent at Avonmouth seemed to slip out of her recollection.

As the afternoon flew by the distant mountains changed into a semicircle of irregular heights. Now the train was climbing into the foothills. It was a lonely land. This was further in the back country than Joan had ever been. The villages were becoming mere clusters of negro cabins. There had been two changes of trains and each time the coach became shabbier and more disreputable, and more impregnated with tobacco smoke. The character of Joan's fellow travelers changed as well. They were uncouther, they wore chin beards and rough store suits; they sat perspiring and collarless, the soft hats pulled over their foreheads. But she looked at them with the loving appreciation of her own people that was in her heart, and they, in the presence of the pretty girl who was traveling alone, displayed the innate courtesy of the Southerner.



The Horse Breaking Into a Short Gallop Near Every Summit.

The sun descended; it was gilding the whole land with level rays of gold and dancing on the horizon like a red ball when the train pulled into Lancaster, the last station before Millville, the terminus. Joan got down and looked about her.

The station was a tiny place and seemed deserted. The booking office was closed. In the waiting room, appearing almost to fill it, was a stout negress with a dozen parcels; from the wicker sides of one two hens' heads with blinking eyes protruded. Outside a ramshackle buggy, with a lean chestnut horse attached, was drawn up to the edge of the muddy road.

A well-dressed young mountain boy in a hard-felt hat was standing beside it. As Joan came out of the station he turned toward her, took off his hat, and bowed.

"Miss Wentworth?" he inquired, in a well-bred tone.

"Yes. You are from the institute?"

"Yes, Miss Wentworth. Mrs. Fraser will be expecting you." He looked beyond her, and Joan, turning, perceived to her discomfiture the man Myers, in his hard hat. He must have traveled up in the train with her.

Myers came forward, taking off his hat grudgingly. "Miss Wentworth, I'm sorry if I annoyed you last night," he said. "I ought to have explained to you that I'm the secretary of the institution. I guess my manners ain't very good, but I meant no harm."

Joan, who had witnessed his presence with consternation, now felt a sudden reaction from her fears. Of course, Myers' explanation made the situation intelligible.

She bowed, and he turned to the boy. "You can take Miss Wentworth up," he said. "I'll find a buggy somewhere."

As there was only room for two in the buggy, Joan did not demur to the proposition. She stepped in, the young man holding out his hand to guard her dress from the wheel. Joan glanced at the man with momentary interest. He had the appearance of a gentleman, and the manners of one. There was no hint of either servility or presumption, and yet there was a sort of independence about the man which fitted him admirably. He flicked the horse, and the buggy began to crawl out of the station yard along the single street of a tiny village, straggling uphill. It was a white village, but clusters of shanties a little back among the pines betrayed the presence of the black element. There was a store or two, their fronts plastered with tobacco and baking powder advertisements, and in front of each stood a gaunt, yellow-faced hillman, chewing and gazing after the buggy with unanimated face.

"This is Lancaster?" asked Joan.

"Yes, Miss Wentworth."

"The people here look depressed."

"There's a good deal of sickness, Miss Wentworth. Hookworm, and what they used to call malaria. But there isn't any malaria here; it's bad diet—salt pork and soda biscuits. And there's pellagra; it's been here for generations, but it wasn't till last year that the medical commission discovered it."

The coachman's knowledge might have been ludicrous in most men of his class, but there was nothing ridiculous in the grave, refined face of the young mountaineer. He must have picked up some knowledge at the institute, thought Joan.

"But it's healthy up in the hills, Miss Wentworth," he added. "This village is Millville. They used to grow cotton in the valley over yonder, but the frost killed the crops three years ago, and the mill fell into ruin. Quite a little water power in that stream."

The buggy ascended a steeper grade, the horse breaking into a short gallop near every summit, and then resuming its leisurely crawl.

"That's the institute, Miss Wentworth," the coachman continued, pointing toward a straggling building on a little plateau. It had the appearance of a large but rather dilapidated farmhouse. "It's three miles by the road," he added, "but less than a mile over the hills."

The horse had stopped to gain breath again. Looking back, Joan saw a white line that crept upward over the rocky slopes almost direct from the station to the building. Half way up was a little speck of black that seemed to move. Joan knew it was Myers' hard hat, his body being hidden from view among the bushes. She shuddered slightly; the man was very repugnant to her.

The horse went on again, the road winding uphill through pastures gay with buttercups and white with little branched asters. It dipped between hedgerows pink with meadowsweet. The sun had set, but its light still gilded the hills. The scene was very peaceful. Now the institute seemed to swing out from among the undulations of the mountain flanks immediately in front of them.

The buggy came to a standstill before the long wooden building, which was of unshingled boards and very much the worse for weather. It had not been painted for years, and two windows in one wing were broken. A patch of weedy, unmown lawn extended between what had once been hedges, but were now mere tangles of undergrowth. Nearby was a large inclosure in which were a few chickens, picking for grains of corn, and a cow at pasture turned her head and gazed at them placidly.

The door opened and a pleasant-looking woman came forward.

"How do you do, Miss Wentworth," she said. "I am the matron, Mrs. Fraser. Doctor Lancaster telegraphed about your coming. I'll show you your room, and your supper will be ready in a few minutes."

Joan descended. The driver, who had leaped to the ground, held his hand over the wheel, but did not offer it to her. Then he re-entered the buggy, and, rather to Joan's surprise, drove off along the road by which they had ascended.

The mystery deepens, with Myers the secretary of the institution. Is Joan in for a disagreeable adventure?

Vision of Cookhouse Reads Like Gulliver

In Paul Bunyan's camp there was a great cookhouse with a kitchen like another Mammoth cave, and a dining hall wherein, under huge and lofty beams, the tables were ranged like the ranks of an army corps drawn up for parade on a plain. Here were served breakfasts of ham and eggs and hot cakes, and huge and incomparable Sunday dinners and the simpler weekday meals of which the coffee was most highly praised, writes James Stephens in the American Mercury.

Paul Bunyan invented a machine for the mixing of the hot-cake batter, so perfectly devised that paving contractors now employ small models of it for mixing cement. The range on which a battalion of cooks fried the hot cakes was greased by a ski champion from Norway, who skied to and from with sides of bacon strapped to his feet.

And that the men in the far end of the cookhouse might be served before the hot cakes cooled, the flunkies speeded on roller skates. It required a crew of 11 teamsters with teams and scrapers to keep the yard back of the cookhouse cleared of coffee grounds and egg shells.

Gypsy Tongue in Print

The Gypsy language, which is not regarded as a written tongue, has been put into print for the first time this autumn for political-campaign purposes, says the New York World.

It is printed in Slavic characters, but most of the words are unintelligible to a Bulgarian or any other Slavic-speaking person. The political terms, however, are Slavic words.

An agrarian-campaign document, printed in the Romany language, points out that the late dictator, Stamboulisky, was anxious to enfranchise the entire Gypsy race, but the democratic union prevented the enfranchisement by putting an end to the Stamboulisky regime.

Birds are said to be especially good as barometers. There is an old rhyme that says, "When the fowls roll in the sand rain is at hand," and when hens are seen trimming their feathers it is a good sign of rain. Skylarks soar high if the weather is likely to remain good, but low if wet days impend.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Why America Must Have More Paved Highways.

Almost every section of the United States is confronted by a traffic problem.

Month by month this problem is becoming more and more serious.

Hundreds of cars pass a given point every hour on many of our state and county roads. Downtown city streets are jammed with traffic.

Think, too, how narrow many of our roads are, and how comparatively few paved highways there are in proportion to the steadily increasing number of cars.

If the motor vehicle is to continue giving the economic service of which it is capable, we must have more Concrete highways and widen those near large centers of population.

Every citizen should discuss highway needs of his community with his local authorities.

Your highway officials will do their part if given your support.

Why postpone meeting this pressing need?

An early start means early relief.

In Praise of Thrift

If it were possible to inject the quality of saving into every boy, we would have a great many more men.—Sir Thomas Lipton.

It's a Brute for Wear!

TWO thousand times for every mile you walk—your overshoes or boots are bent and wrinkled!

It's these strains—repeated day in and day out—that break the ordinary rubber overshoe or boot.

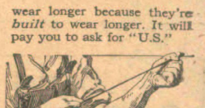
And that's why into every "U.S." Walrus and Boot is put live, elastic rubber.

If you cut off a strip of this rubber, you'd find it would stretch more than five times its length—without breaking—and snap back into shape every time like an elastic band.

Anchored in this live rubber are layer on layer of tough fabric reinforcements. They give rugged strength to "U.S." Walrus and Boots.

No wonder people all over the country are finding that "U.S." brand rubber footwear is a big economy—that it gives longer wear and better service.

"U.S." Overshoes and Boots wear longer because they're built to wear longer. It will pay you to ask for "U.S."



So live and elastic is the rubber in "U.S." Walrus and Boots that a strip of it will stretch five times its length—without breaking.

Other "U.S." Rubber Footwear

You'll find every kind of rubber footwear in the big "U.S." line. In addition to the "U.S." Walrus and "U.S." Boots, there's the "U.S." lace Bootee, an all-rubber workshoe—and "U.S." Rubbers and Arctics for every member of the family. Look for the "U.S." Trademark whenever you buy—the honor mark of the largest rubber organization in the world.

There will be no services at the local church next Sunday as Prof. Goodrich of Albion college will lecture on the "Holy Land" at the Somerset Center church at 11:30 a. m. and all local people are invited to be present at that time.

Whenever high school students develop into brilliant football, baseball or basket ball stars the newspapers at once make note of the fact. But whenever students display extraordinary abilities in deportment, the press rarely reports the matter to their readers, and as a result parents often wonder concerning the conduct of the young folks in public. Sometime ago a woman put a question to us as follows: "What do you think of my daughter and what do the boys say about her?" In reply, we said very little but if the public wishes to know what the boys are thinking we shall gratify its curiosity by saying that during the past few months, at least half a dozen high school boys have put themselves out of the way to inform us that Hilda Sawdey of the local high school was an ideal sort of person. This was interesting for we have been around school buildings most of the time since seven years of age and in the course of that time had never heard so many boys express such nice ideas about one single girl in such a brief space of time therefore we bribed the boys to tell the public why they thought as they did and here are some of the things they said "She is a perfect lady." "She doesn't use barn paint." "She doesn't stay out all night with the boys." "You have to act like a gentleman in her presence." Now, we would like to meet a certain college professor and tell him that he is off his trolley when he declares that the modern boys have no admiration for the girls who understand what modesty means.

Motorist Sued by Railroad

Here is the other side of it: A motorist who drove his car onto a Southern Pacific track in California and promptly went to sleep, succeeded in damaging a locomotive and the company sued him for the repair costs. Why not? Just because the railroad corporation is "big" it loses no right to decent protection. It is a public necessity and must be maintained. It has its right-of-way and no turn-outs; its trains must make regular schedules as provided by law. The motorist has no more right recklessly or maliciously to impose costs on the million dollar security holders than he has to steal from a blind apple woman; nor has he the right to go unscathed after causing a railroad wreck that kills railroad passengers. This suit along a new line of thought may establish a precedent for automobile responsibility that will effect the 22,000 automobile killings every year

"ASTHMA STOPPED IN 10 MINUTES

After Taking First Dose of Asthma-Tabs," is the Amazing Statement of a Canadian Resident.

Coughing, wheezing, Choking Asthma, bronchial asthma, hay fever and shortness of breath need not be dreaded any longer since the discovery of a well known chemist. Now it is possible for those who suffer from this dread disease to "stop these troubles often in a few minutes with Asthma-Tabs" is the amazing statement of one who has taken the treatment. This famous prescription is bringing joyous new health and freedom from dread asthma and hay fever to thousands of people where everything else had failed.

"A choking spell was relieved in ten minutes after taking first dose of Asthma-Tabs and Mrs. Gower hasn't had a spell of Asthma since," says E. P. Gower, Regina, Sask. "The wheezing stopped after two days and the cough and expectoration gradually diminished and has practically gone now. Mrs. Gower suffered from Asthma for thirty years and could do no real heavy work, but I am glad to say that since taking Asthma-Tabs nothing seems to bother her."

This wonderful formula, prepared by one of the largest laboratories in the world, and generally known as Asthma-Tabs, is easily used at home, and seems to work like magic in its rapidity on people of all ages.

No matter how bad your condition, no matter what your age or occupation, no matter what you have tried, if you are suffering from asthma, hay fever, etc., I am so confident that Asthma-Tabs will end these troubles that I offer to send to every reader of this paper my big $1.00 treatment absolutely free. Just write R. N. Townley 555 Baker-Vawter Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and I will send you my regular $1.00 treatment absolutely free, so write today before this introductory offer is withdrawn.

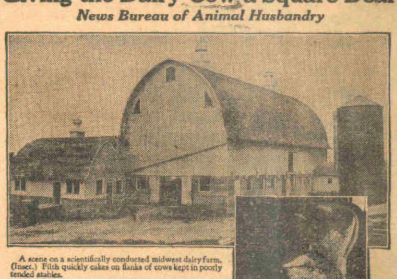
Giving the Dairy Cow a Square Deal

News Bureau of Animal Husbandry



A scene on a scientifically conducted midwest dairy farm. (Inset.) Filth quickly cakes on flanks of cows kept in poorly tended stables.

There are now 25,375,000 dairy cattle in the United States. Of these, says a recent report, only about one-half are cared for in a manner to enable them to return a fair profit to their owners.

Many a milk cow has been accused of being a "boarder" when the owner had only himself to blame. Unlike human beings, dairy cows never shirk intentionally, and frequent tests reveal that seemingly unimportant details in the care of milk cows have startling effects on milk production.

If you are considering drying up any of your milk herd because you believe them to be unproductive, fill in the questionnaire below for your own satisfaction. If you can write YES as an answer to all of the questions, it is safe to assume that, if your cows are not diseasesd, they are getting a square deal and therefore ought to repay you generously.

Are you feeding them a properly balanced ration?

If not, or if you are not quite sure of what makes up a properly balanced ration for milk cows, get in touch with your county agent. It will pay you to do this.

Are the stables kept clean—especially during the months you keep the milk cows in?

Clean stables and good ventilation are essential if the cow is to give full returns. Clean gutters, clean bedding and lots of pure air are important.

Has your milk herd access to all the fresh water they will drink?

If not, give it to them. Water is cheap, and they will repay you with more and better milk.

Do you keep the cows clean?

Filth adhering to flanks and udders takes money right out of your pocket. Impurities are absorbed into the system. That means more feed or less milk. Milk from a manure-caked cow is unclean and, on a strict interpretation, against the law. In just a few minutes, you can clip the udders, flanks and underlines of the cows. Thereafter, it is only a matter of seconds to wipe off all clinging foreign matter with a damp cloth. Farmers and dairymen who follow this practice say it increases milk flow and enriches the milk. And the cow is certainly more comfortable and contented.

Are you giving your cows a square deal?

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Petro of Moscow Plains passed away Monday and the funeral services were held at the Plains church on Wednesday and burial there.

Frank Tiffany Sr. and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Tiffany Jr. and son Robert of Angola Indiana, and Kenneth Tiffany of Fort Wayne were Sunday guests at the home of Mrs. Catherine Tiffany.

Mrs. Benjamin McLouth of Moscow died at her home in that village Friday, Feb. 13, at 8:00 p. m. Funeral services were held at the late home Sunday afternoon and burial at Moscow.

We were recently handed a copy of the De funiak (Florida) Springs Herald by Fred A. Rock of this village. It is quite interesting to read about the different climate down there. One item in particular we noticed was that that particular place was shipping two hundred barrels of radishes north on February 5th, this year.

The Woman's club was pleasantly entertained at the home of Miss Ethel Clement on Monday afternoon. Roll call was responded to by sayings of Washington or Lincoln. The following program was given. Paper "The value of the farmer to the nation", Mrs. Lizzie Holcomb. Paper "Essentials of Americanization", Mrs. Addie Baker Musical contest, Mrs. Grace Williams at the organ, twenty five hymns were played, members to give name, author of words and music. The next meeting will be on Monday March 2nd at the home of Mrs. Alice Williams.

George Hayes formerly of this village died at his home in Milnes Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 17, after an illness of some duration, that was due to a complication of diseases. He was 74 years of age and had been proprietor of a store at Milnes 11 years. He was a Mason and Knight Templar of long standing. He was born at Leeds England, coming here when ten years of age. He is survived by three children, Louis of California Arthur of Lansing and Mrs. Warren Hepfinger of Grand Rapids, the widow and one sister at Coldwater. Burial at Coldwater.

It is claimed that the question of road building has so far engrossed our representatives at Lansing that they can do little outside work. It has practically been settled that beginning Jan. 1, 1926, the state shall pay for all road work instead of the county Report says that where there are expert engineers and paraphanalia both will be used by the state in the work. Altogether 25 bills have been introduced in Lansing to build individual stretches of road and likely none of them will get through. Another bill calls for 500 miles of good road on trunk lines only.

"Bill" Sheldon formerly of the Greendale Dairy of this village later of the Ford factories at Detroit, is now employed by the Freeman Dairy Co. of Flint and is making good as the following item from the Litchfield Gazette of Feb. 13 will show:

"W. E. Sheldon, manager of the butter department of the Freeman Dairy Co. at Flint, was elected president of the Michigan Association of Creamery Owners and Managers last Wednesday at the business session of their annual meeting held at the dairy building at M. A. C. in East Lansing. Mr. Sheldon has many friends in Litchfield who will be glad to learn of this honor conferred upon him."

He was at the home of his father when he committed the act, and Dr. McFarland was called and endeavored to remove the poison from the young man's stomach but failed.

William Robert Haskins was born in Moscow township August 4, 1890 and died at the home of his parents February 14, 1925 being 34 years, 6 months and 10 days of age. He was the second of three children and leaves to mourn the loss, father, mother, sister, 4 neices and a host of relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted at his parents' home on Monday afternoon February 16th. Rev. Virgil Hunt of the North Adams Congregational church, officiating, and the services were under the auspices of Leighr Wright Post of the American Legion Hillsdale which attended in a body. Burial was in the North Adams cemetery.

Results of Caucus

The regular village get-together which occurs every spring in caucus was held Monday evening the 16th with the usual results. There is an old saying that "if you don't go to caucus and do your bit you should not complain if the nominations don't suit" but it don't apply since we find if all went results would be just the same, hence some figure that until a more opportune time they will just let Village affairs drift along most any old way.

Frank Holcomb was nominated chairman and he appointed Josephine Jones and Julia Mercer tellers. Balloting proceeded and Howard Williams the only new nominee, was put up for clerk. Merton Wolcott president and Harley Fry, Darwin Carney and Glenn Mercer trustees full term (renominated) and Lew Eggleston appointed to fill vacancy. We understand the small sum of thirteen votes were polled while the Hillsdale Daily reported a large crowd present. There are times when two is a company and three are a crowd.

METHODIST CHURCH

REV. W. H. HUTTON, Pastor

Supplication Period 10:00 A. M.
Morning worship 10:30
Sabbath School 11:45 A. M.
Epworth League 6:00 P. M.
Evening Worship 7:00

The subject for Sunday morning worship will be "One hundred percent for Christ and the Church. And for evening services will be, "Modern Substitutes." Mr. Perkins will sing a solo entitled, "One sweetly solemn thought." Also special singing by the Epworth Choir.

Next Wednesday February 25th. the Ladies Aid Society will serve a new England Dinner in the Church parlors.

There are still a few whose place is vacant in the Sabbath school and we would be very glad if you would come and fill that place. We asked last week for a record breaker in attendance and instead of 150 as we asked for, we had 156 in attendance. Now don't get scared but it is not much farther to the 200 mark, we are wondering if we can make a record smasher and reach the 200 mark? we only need 44 more. Let's go.

The one hundred new chairs which the Ladies Aid purchased for the League room seems to have its desired effect on the attendance Sunday evening in Epworth League, as last Sunday evening we had 58 in attendance. The Pastor will lead the League Service next Sunday evening, with the topic "Our country's Christian Cornerstones." Let's all be there.

The Methodist Quartet will sing at the Wheatland Church at 2:30 p. m.

Congregational Church Calendar

Our special programs are proving very beneficial and interesting to all of us.

There will be choir practice at the home of Frances Young Saturday evening at 7:30. All come.

Our Family Night Services will start the first Sunday evening in March. Watch for later announcements.

"There's a Week's Work of Fencing—Done in a Day"

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is used: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

Back Bad Since the Grip?

Has a cold or grip sapped your strength? Do you suffer constant backache, feel nervous and depressed? Then look to your kidneys! Many cases of kidney trouble are the result of infectious disease. The kidneys often break down under the strain of filtering disease-created poisons from the blood. That's why a cold or grip often leaves backache, headaches, dizzy spells and irregular kidney action. Help your weakened kidneys with Doan's Pills. Doan's have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Eugene Funk or Dr. Jardine May Be Picked for the Agriculture Portfolio.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE is said to be, at the time this is written, nearly ready to name his new secretary of agriculture, to succeed Mr. Gore on March 4 when that gentleman becomes governor of West Virginia. For several days it was believed that John G. Fields of Oklahoma City, publisher of farm papers, would get the position. Then two more names were brought forward, those of Eugene Funk, Illinois farmer and brother of Congressman Frank H. Funk, and William M. Jardine, president of the Kansas Agriculture college and a member of the President's agricultural conference. Mr. Funk belongs to a famous family of corn-belt farmers and is himself not only a practical agriculturist but an authority on farm economics and the marketing of food products. He is a graduate of Yale and studied also in Germany. It was believed he was just the kind of man the President was seeking.

Doctor Jardine had the united backing of the Kansas delegation in congress though it had previously indorsed J. C. Mohler for the post. So far as the theoretical side is concerned, his experience would seem to fit him to take the portfolio. Starting life as a cattle puncher in Montana, he later attended the Utah Agricultural college and in 1896 went to Washington as assistant United States cerealist in charge of the grain work in the West. In 1900 he was made director of agronomy work in the Kansas college and in 1918 became its president. Doctor Jardine was in conference with the President last week, and also went before the senate committee on agriculture to explain some of his recommendations in the agriculture conference. He told the senators that agriculture in the United States is only passing through a normal post-war crisis and that it is certain to recover.

MEANWHILE President Coolidge is formulating an agricultural policy for the nation, based partly on the advice of Secretary Gore and the agricultural conference and largely on the ideas of Secretary of Commerce Hoover. Its fundamental principle is that the country shall be self-contained in the matter of production and consumption of food and clothing, that it shall raise all the farm products it needs, including those now imported, but shall cease to raise them for export. Another purpose is to increase the buying power of the entire community so as to increase the consumption of farm products at home and in turn warrant the increase of production beyond the normal accretion due to the growth of population. The fostering of co-operative marketing also enters largely into the plan. Representative Dickinson of Iowa, leader of the house farm bloc, says attempts are being made to "Hooverize" the Agriculture department.

UNDER suspension of the rules the house passed the Kelly bill providing for increases in postal salaries amounting to $68,000,000 a year and for changes in the mail rates that are designed to add more than $62,000,000 annually to the revenues of the Post Office department. This is a substitute for the bill which the senate passed and the house sent back. It provides for about $21,000,000 more revenue than did the senate measure, and it makes the salary increases retroactive to January 1, 1925, instead of to July 1, 1924.

GENERAL MITCHELL'S fight for a unified air service is attracting more and more interest daily, but those who agree with his views do not now believe they will prevail, especially since the official announcement that President Coolidge is not in favor of a unified service. The Navy department bolstered its stand by issuing a list of 21 eminent men and influential groups that are opposed to the views of Mitchell. This list comprised Gen. John J. Pershing, Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, Maj. Gen. Charles T. Menoher, former chief of army air service; the general staff, United States army, Rear Admirals William S. Sims, Bradley A. Fiske, W. F. Fullam, Charles E. Badger, Henry T. Mayo; Admiral Robert E. Coontz, commander in chief United States fleet; Rear Admiral H. S. Knapp, Vice Admiral Joseph Strauss, Capt. T. T. Craven, formerly director of naval aviation; Capt. Noble E. Irwin, formerly director of naval aviation; Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, present chief of the bureau of aeronautics; the general board of the navy, the national advisory committee for aeronautics, Marshal Foch, Marshal Haig, Admiral Jellicoe, Admiral Beatty.

The house aircraft committee heard more testimony from Mitchell, gave out a denial that any witnesses were muzzled by their superiors, and asked permission to defer making a report until the next congress because the time before March 4 is too short for the reaching of comprehensive conclusions.

CONGRESS learned officially last week that Coolidge and Dawes won the Presidential election. The houses met in joint session and received the tidings in the form of two mahogany boxes containing the certificates of the electors. The ballots were examined and pronounced "regular in form and properly authenticated" and Senator Cummins, the presiding officer, solemnly announced that Coolidge and Dawes had received 382 votes, Davis and Bryan 136 votes, and La Follette and Wheeler 13 votes. This, he declared, was under the Constitution a sufficient decision of the persons elected, so the joint session came to an end. The mahogany boxes are made new each four years and are presented one to the outgoing vice president—or in this instance to Senator Cummins—and the other to the incoming vice president.

ARRANGEMENTS for the inauguration of Coolidge and Dawes on March 4 are nearing completion, but they have been tremendously curtailed by the President's determination that economy shall rule. As now planned, the affair will consist of the swearing in ceremony at the Capitol and a brief parade down Pennsylvania avenue to the White House. The governors may join in the procession, with their staffs, if they wish to, and army and navy detachments around Washington will be included. The projected fireworks display in the evening has been abandoned, and in place of the inaugural ball there will be a charity ball.

SO SERIOUS is the opposition to Charles B. Warren as attorney general that his appointment may fail of confirmation by the senate at this session of congress. It is due to his connection with the sugar trust and is voiced especially by Basil Manly, director of the People's Legislative service. In the first place Mr. Warren was at one time a representative of the American Sugar Refining company in the maintenance of holdings in beet sugar companies. Until a few days ago he was president of the Michigan Beet Sugar company which, together with other beet sugar concerns, has just been accused by the federal trade commission of conspiracy to suppress competition. Warren is named as one of the defendants.

Mr. Warren's friends retort with the assertion that the trade commission is continually instigating charges that turn out to be unfounded. They point to the fact that the commission in the course of its career has been upheld by the federal courts in 14 cases and has been overthrown in 35 cases.

SENATOR NORRIS is to have the investigation of the so-called power trust for which he has been clamoring. The senate has called on the federal trade commission to make such an inquiry, naming specifically the General Electric company and seeking to know the extent to which that company or its stockholders or security holders monopolize or control production, generation or transmission of power or electric energy. An amendment to the resolution was adopted calling for an investigation of the American Tobacco company and the Imperial Tobacco company of Great Britain and their alleged efforts to hamper tobacco co-operatives.

STILL another investigation was demanded in the senate by Senator Howell of Nebraska, the subject of the proposed inquiry being the Van Sweringen-Nickel Plate merger of the Nickel Plate, Erie, Pere Marquette, Chesapeake & Ohio and Hocking Valley lines, and the acquisition of the Gulf Coast lines by the Missouri Pacific. Mr. Howell said the Van Sweringen merger was being financed by J. P. Morgan & Co. and the First National bank of New York.

RAILROADS will continue to impose surcharges on passengers using Pullman facilities, the practice having been approved by the interstate commerce commission. The majority opinion says "there is less warrant for eliminating the surcharge than for reducing the basic passenger fare which applies even to travel in mixed trains of freight and passenger cars."

GREAT BRITAIN, through Chancellor of the Exchequer Churchill, has made an informal proposal to France concerning the Anglo-French debt. Briefly, Britain repeats Balfour's offer to make a heavy reduction in the debt provided France agrees to make fixed annual payments irrespective of the actual receipts from the Dawes annuities. Finance Minister Clementel and other officials in Paris considered the British plan fair in principle and offering a satisfactory basis for negotiations. The government press in France agreed with this view, but the proposal was bitterly attacked by the nationalist and reactionary papers, which blamed America for forcing Britain to demand reimbursement. The finance committee of the French chamber of deputies has named a subcommittee to study the matter, and it is believed a conference will be held in London within a few weeks.

FOLLOWING the withdrawal of the United States and China because of dissatisfaction, the international opium conference at Geneva adopted a protocol and convention and adjourned sine die. Japan had threatened to quit but was placated by the insertion of a clause reaffirming the obligations of The Hague convention and making it clear that opium smoking is permitted only temporarily. The signers were Great Britain, India, France, Japan, Holland, Portugal and Siam.

ONE of the greatest disasters in German mining history occurred in the Stein mine at Dortmund where 144 men were entombed by an explosion, and at least 138 of them perished. The tragedy aroused the people to a state of anger that threatened revolution, for the mine owners were accused of failing to safeguard their employees and also of paying them starvation wages while selling coal at higher prices than the British and Americans.

MORE than 325 hours after Floyd Collins became entombed in Sand cave, Kentucky, by the fall of a bowlder on his foot, the rescuers who were sinking a shaft from the top of the hill had reached the limestone roof of the cavern near which the young man was trapped. He had been without food for eight days and for two days those who listened with a microphone outfit for sounds of his heartbeats and breathing had heard nothing.

During the week the state military board conducted an investigation into the efforts at rescue that had been made and also into persistent reports that the whole affair started in a publicity scheme to attract visitors to the cave. There had even been stories that Collins was not in the cavern at all, but these and other wild tales were discredited by the testimony of most of the witnesses. However, the idea was held by many persons that Collins was the victim of a hoax, and the county attorney announced that there would be a grand jury inquiry and that charges of homicide might be lodged.

Bonded Train Crews to Carry Securities

New York.—The National Surety company has announced that financial houses in the downtown district will, within a few days, employ bonded train crews, employed on commuters' trains, to transport securities. These men are normally idle from 10 o'clock in the morning until 4 in the afternoon. Special arrangements have been made by the surety company with the railroads interested, it was announced, and the railroad unions have given their approval to them.

As a result of replacing irresponsible boys with trusted trainmen the surety company, which serves about 80 per cent of the financial institutions in the Wall street district, hopes to reduce thefts to a minimum. Bankers and brokers informed of the plan gave their enthusiastic approval.

The men will be equipped with a new patent steel vest made with inside pockets for the carrying of large amounts of currency. This vest is locked when the man starts out and cannot be opened without the key. The telltale bag which attracts the attention of highwaymen thus will be abolished in the carrying of valuable securities.

The trainmen range in age from twenty-five to sixty, are bonded and are regarded as highly responsible individuals. It is estimated that they should be able to add $50 to $60 a month to their wages without in any way competing with other labor.

Michigan Happenings

Thirteen fliers from Selfridge field, comprising the first pursuit group of the United States army air service, will leave there under command of Major T. G. Lanphier, commanding officer at Selfridge field, for a series of maneuvers unique in army flying annals. They will head north to Oscoda, where their planes, equipped with an adaptation of skis as landing gear, will be put through their paces, testing their usefulness as defense units in a northern clime at a season when neither army nor navy could work at highest efficiency.

Petoskey's new municipal charter now is in effect and the present officers are working under the new rules and regulations until their successors are elected in April. Nominations will be made through ward caucuses March 16 and at city-wide convention to be held March 18. Each ward will nominate and elect its councilman and supervisor and the city-at-large the mayor, clerk and treasurer. The new city manager must be a registered engineer and will serve as engineer-manager of the city.

Addition of 500 miles of state highway to that already under the supervision of the state highway board is planned under an agreement reached at a conference of the board's members at Lansing. Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck was present at the meeting. Under the agreement, counties of the state will be relieved of the burden of maintenance and construction, Jan. 1, 1926. Repeal of the Covert county reward system was agreed on.

Commissioner Hugh A. McPherson of the State Banking Department has issued a bulletin concerning reports of the 585 state incorporated banks, and the two industrial banks of Michigan at the close of business Feb. 2. The bulletin shows a decrease of $61,160,395.11 in aggregate footings since the last reports which were of date of Oct. 24, 1924, and an increase of $28,235,252.56 since Dec. 31, 1923.

An American Railway Express Co. truck containing $15,000 to $18,000 in merchandise was stolen in a holdup at Detroit last week. Bandits, in a touring car, forced the truck to the curb where they ordered the two drivers and messenger into their car at the point of pistols. They were driven several blocks away and released. The truck was found later but its contents had been taken.

David M. Pierce, manager of the Cunningham drug store, Detroit, is considering adoption of the "notch" system of mortal statistics used out west, following a gun fight in the store, in which he slew his second bandit. The holdup was the third at that store within two weeks. In another robbery attempt there two years ago, a bandit was shot and killed by Pierce.

Voters of Michigan are not to have an opportunity to register their opinion of the two cent gasoline tax law at the polls. This became a certainty when the Supreme Court denied the mandamus petition filed by the Detroit Automobile Club, which had sought to nullify the immediate effect clause of the law.

A reduction of fire insurance rates of from 2 to 4 per cent on Adrian business and industrial property has been assured by members of the Michigan Inspection bureau which determines insurance rates. The change will give Adrian the lowest fire insurance rate of any city of its size in the state.

Mary Gogoff, 13-year old daughter of a wealthy merchant of Battle Creek, known as "the girl without a country," because of her entry into the United States from Canada was held up by immigration officials, was admitted to the country by Secretary of Labor Davis under $1,000 bond.

Sheriff A. J. Hanchett has notified dance hall managers throughout Shiawassee county that all Saturday night dances must stop at midnight. The action was made necessary, he said, by many complaints he has received against dances continuing far into Sunday morning.

Miss Margaret Elliott, a graduate of Wellesley and Radcliffe colleges has been named assistant professor in the economics department at the University of Michigan, it was announced, Professor Elliott is the first woman instructor in the economics school.

Peter Mizura, 35 years old, a farmer living near Richmond, died in a Mt. Clemens hospital following the breaking of the fly-wheel of a buzzsaw, which tore off his right arm.

President Calvin Coolidge will come to Ann Arbor on June 15 to attend the commencement exercises of the University of Michigan, it is announced. It will be the first time a United States president has ever made the commencement address at Ann Arbor.

First Opium Conference Ends

Geneva—The international opium conference here adjourned without date after adopting both the protocol and the convention concerning opium smoking. The conference closed with the understanding that despite the withdrawal of China, the possibility of her delegation's signing would be left open. Great Britain, India, France, Japan, Holland and Portugal and Siam signed the convention, with the protocol adopted by the first opium conference.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Oh God, on High:
This is the month of heroes.
The month of Washington, who was the father of his country—
And of Lincoln, who was its saviour,
It is a short month.
But it is a month crowded with greatness
And with splender!

And so, God—
When temptations assail us,
And when doubts beset us,
And when pettiness is close to us
Let us remember to be calm,
And steadfast.
And great of heart,
In the face of our soul's battle,
As was Washington.
And let us have the strength
To be true to an ideal,
As Lincoln was true.

This is the month of heroes,
Oh, God—
Let us, in our small way,
Be heroes, too.
So that our countrymen, who have gone on Ahead—
May be glad that they have given us a nation,
To call our own! —Amen.

The American Creed

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a Sovereign nation of many Sovereign states; a perfect union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which the American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it; to support its Constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its flag; and to defend it against all enemies.

HERE GROWS A MAN FOR AMERICA

"My child, remember that the land in which you live was bought by the blood of your forefathers that every man might live in freedom and justice. It has been kept safe for you by the blood of your fathers and brothers. You—who shall inherit this priceless possession—are a child of liberty, an American. Walk upright in your native land; fear no man; harm no man. Reverence the flag of your country. God grant you may never stain its folds by any act of injustice to another little brother whom it protects—it matters not what his color or creed. Be honest; be pure; be truthful, that men may look into your eyes and say, 'Here Grows a Man for America'!"

AMERICA FIRST

Not merely in matters material, but in things of the spirit.

Not merely in science, inventions motors, and skyscrapers, but also in ideals, principals, character.

Not merely in the calm assertion of rights, but in the glad assumption of duties.

Not flaunting her strength as a giant, but bending in helpfulness over a sick and wounded world like a good Samaritan.

Not in splendid isolation, but in Christ-like co-operation.

Not in pride, arrogance, and disdain of other races and peoples, but in sympathy, love and understanding.

Not in treading again the old, worn, bloody pathway which ends inevitably in chaos and disaster, but in blazing a new trail, along which, please God, other nations will follow, into the new Jerusalem, where wars shall be no more.

Some day some nation must take that path—unless we are to lapse once again into utter barbarism—and that honor I covet for my beloved America.

And so, in that spirit and with these hopes, I say with all my heart and soul, "America First."

February's Heroes

Two national heroes came to this earth in February. A very good month for America.

George Washington seems a shadowy figure to young folks now But his romantic story goes beyond the thrills of fiction. His military skill would have made him a famous general in any age. Greater still was his unconquerable courage. If it had not been for that resolute spirit, we might still be serving the English king. Who knows?

When ordinary human nature sank into despair, George Washington began to get into full action. When they told him a thing couldn't be done, he began to get thoroughly interested. We can't rise to that level. But if we would follow our best leaders as Washington's men followed him across frozen Valley Forge, we would get somewhere in this country.

Abraham Lincoln could direct the fighting armies with the relentlessness of any warrior. But when the fighting was over, the beaten man was his brother, to be welcomed back to his old place in the family circle. If his big heart could have guided this country through the tragic reconstruction days, the bitter taint of that time could never have the relations between North and South.

Lincoln was a plain man. To him the shows and tinsel of the world, its glories and pomposites, were but dust and ashes. If his warm sympathy were leading us now, the deep chasm between rich and poor would be obliterated. Men would be ashamed, in the revealing sunlight of that great soul, to strive for selfishly used wealth or to shirk honest toil.

The spirit of these great men asks us here in North Adams for higher civic aspirations. It calls to us from across the years, to manifest Washington's courage and resolution, and Lincoln's insight and sympathy, as we enter the unknown future and deal with the problems that lie behind its veil.

New M. A. C. Radio Station Now On Air

Radiophone Station WKAR, the M. A. C., is now on the air regularly as one of the leading broadcasting stations of the country.

Programs from the college station, which opened only three weeks ago, have been heard all over the United States and Canada many replies from the Pacific coast being included in WKAR's mail bag regularly.

While the programs broadcasted from the college station are varied educational material is receiving consideration. On Monday evenings members of the M. A. C, staff furnish general educational programs, covering agriculture, engineering, home economics, and general subjects. On Friday evenings, departments of state government at Lansing furnish the educational programs, the departments alternating in going on the air.

A college music and entertainment session on Wednesday evening, a special late dance program Saturday morning, noon weather reports, and accounts of home athletic contests at M. A. C. complete the regular broadcasting schedule.

WKAR(M. A. C.) Operating Schedule (Until March 1) Eastern Standard Time. Monday 7 to 8 educational, M. A. C. faculty. Wednesday 7 to 9:15 music. Friday 7 to 8 educational, state departments. Saturday 12:30 to 1:30 a. m dance programs, Pastime Players. Daily(except Sunday) 12 noon weather forecast. Home basketball games at M. A. C. February 20, 28 and March 3.

To Start New Farm School Of The Air

A new "school of the air" will offer its courses of study to citizens of Michigan, as well as all other states of the middle west, when WKAR, the powerful M. A. C. station, goes on with regular farm courses after March 1.

The first of these courses will deal with agricultural engineering, covering everything from gas engines to household convenience equipment. It will start on Monday, March 2, and run for two weeks. The lectures, two of which are booked for each evening, will run from 7:15 until 8;00 o'clock, eastern time, from Monday through Friday, inclusive of each week.

Following the agricultural engineering course, other special phases of agricultural will be covered in courses of similar length. The school will be kept up through the spring and early summer months it is understood, with crops, dairying, gardening, and other subjects included.

The radio farm school, the first of its kind ever attempted in this part of the country, is expected to prove of interest and value to the thousands of Michigan farmers who now own radio receiving sets. Additional thousands of city folks will also be interested in the gardening courses, and other general material to be sent in the school.

Registration for any of the courses can be made by any radio listener in the state. Those who register and complete the work of the course will be given official certificates, copies of the lectures and other material to round out the courses of the school. The Director of Short Courses, M. A. C. East Lansing, will serve as registration officer for the radio courses

Pyrotol Proves To Be Good Explosive

Pyrotol, the war salvage explosive which has been released to farmers of the State, is about equal to a twenty percent dynamite or to sodatol in strength, according to Larry Livingston, agricultural engineering specialist with the M. A. C. extension staff. Sodatol, which was delivered last spring, gave such excellent satisfaction that government officials are said to have endeavored to make pyrotol of equal strength.

The average person using explosives knows the power of a twenty percent dynamite, and those who have developed pyrotol have made an explosive equally efficient Just as long as pyrotol is used on stumps and stones or for tree planting, entire satisfaction will result.

This war salvage explosive is being distributed to the farmers of the State through the M. A. C. and is being handled in the counties by the county agricultural agents. In those counties which have no agricultural agent, information can be secured from the Extension Department of the M. A. C. at Bay City, East Lansing or Marquette, Michigan. The only cost to the farmers is the cost of cartridging, boxing, and transportation.

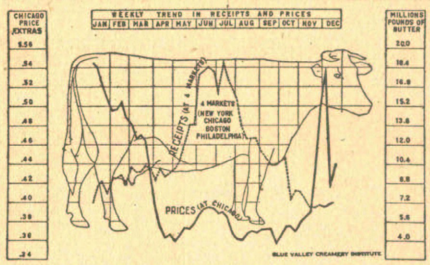
The Year in the Dairy Market



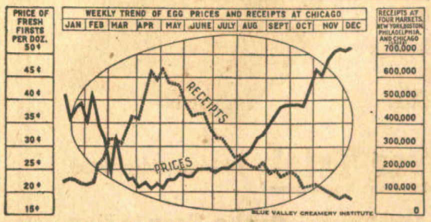
DAIRY product markets have rung a number of surprising figures on America's agricultural cash register during the year 1924. The diversification program which many farmers have adopted has led, on the whole, to better production and larger profits, says the Blue Valley Creamery institute in a review of the dairy situation.

General opinion held that during 1924 butter prices would tumble from the stable level they had kept for the past three years and reach a lower price level in harmony with the extremely heavy production anticipated. January marked a high point for 92 score butter in Chicago at 55 cents. In April the drop in price occurred and 92 score fell to 35 cents. Then suddenly the unexpected twisted into the situation. The former heavy imports dropped off when prices fell, for the importers could no longer make profits over the United States tariff wall of eight cents. Production within the country fell short of expectation during the spring and summer. Prices jumped accordingly.

The unusually favorable late summer and fall sent calculations flying again. At the time of the year when production is usually expected to slow up, 1924 turned the tables and output failed to decrease as rapidly as ordinarily during this period. Cows produced heavily. Consequently butter prices hung low over a doubtful market, running ten cents lower part of the time than during the same period in 1923.

With every man, woman and child in the country consuming an average of 50 gallons of milk in 1922 and a per capita increase of three gallons in this consumption showing for 1923, the possibilities of fluid milk markets loom up in dollars and cents. Fluid milk flooded the markets during a large part of the year, due to the favorable weather. It continued to pour into the nation's markets during the late summer and fall, but seasonal declines in November and December helped to hold the market steady at the close of the year.

Fewer Eggs for "Ham and"



EGG production did not live up to its early promises during 1924, according to a review just completed by the Blue Valley Creamery institute. A survey shows that on January 1, 1924, more chickens were counted on farms throughout the country than ever before. Diversification, which has become a part of the program for poultry as well as dairy and hog products, stimulated a rapid increase in the size of poultry flocks and put the mark at 474,000,000 on the first day of the year. This was an increase of 32 per cent since 1920.

In consequence, the eggs were counted far in advance, and a record production was forecast. Prices held very low, for storage men were reluctant to buy since storage holdings had lost money during the past two years. The entire country was ready for an onslaught of eggs and prices were ready to meet the oversupply.

But the oversupply never arrived. Receipts for the year were 14,644,583 cases as against the receipts of 15,837,529 cases in 1923. This is the first decrease in receipts for the past four years.

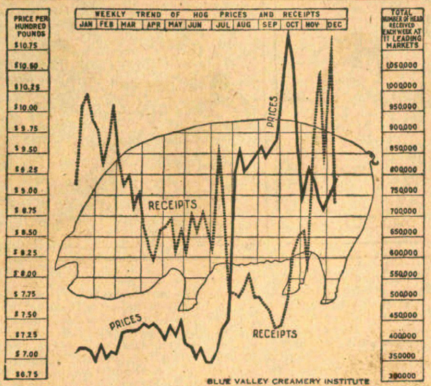
Fewer Hogs—Prices Going Up



BLUE VALLEY CREAMERY INSTITUTE

EXPERIENCED hog breeders and buyers believe the period of excessive shipments and low prices for hogs will be followed by a period of a lowered production and higher prices, according to reports received by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute.

For every ten hogs grown in 1923 only eight were grown in 1924. A careful survey over the hog belt further shows a 15 to 20 per cent reduction in the coming spring pig crop as compared with last year's short pig crop. This actual shortage on farms will naturally result in a lowering of shipments to markets and higher prices.

Exactly when this lowered pork supply will be felt is not certain, but it is expected during the early part of the year. Recently prices have averaged from $2.00 to $2.50 per 100 pounds higher to the producer than last winter. When the 1923 pig crop was marketed the average price of hogs at Chicago was $7.65. The corn situation and short hog supply is expected to drive prices up to more profitable levels for the producer.

No signs are visible for a falling off in the demand for hogs during 1925. If pork consumption holds up and if there follows a normal corn crop in 1925, hog feeding this year promises to be far more profitable than it has been for some time.

Where Nation's Milk Ends

FACTORIES absorb over 34 per cent of the American dairy cow's yearly milk production. More than three-fourths of this amount is turned out as creamery butter, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The amount of milk used as creamery butter is steadily increasing. To supply the demand of creameries in 1922 required seven billion pounds more than were used in 1914.

Cheese factories are the smallest unit of manufacture of any branch of the dairy industry. Only 3.7 per cent of the annual milk production is made into cheese.

There was a tremendous boom in the condensed milk industry during the European war. By 1919 the volume of exports totaled 40 per cent of the total manufacture. This was an increase of 5,100 per cent over prewar years. In 1920 exports were cut in half. This, with a 17 per cent shrink in domestic consumption, caused a sharp reduction of manufacture. Since 1920, however, condensed milk consumption has again doubled and the export trade is steadily improving. Nearly 90 per cent of the condensed milk made is manufactured in eight states—Wisconsin, New York, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Washington and California.

Tut-Ank Hamen's Tomb Is Rich

Last summer we heard a vast deal concerning the tomb of the great Pharaoh which was uncovered on the desert sands of Valley of the Kings in Egypt, but most of the ravings we set down as pure newspaper bunk. As a matter of fact King Tut-Ank Hamen's Tomb was discovered by an American Howard Carter, and himself and Lord Carnarvon, an Englishman, were the first to visit it after being sealed 3300 years. The sensation of getting into such a museum as this tomb must have been, would certainly be a novel one to most anybody.

James T. Nichols, the world traveler, says he visited the tomb of this monarch but was not able to get into it as the entrance had been re-walled and it is the intention of the Egyptian government to leave intact the sarcophagus of the great Pharaoh while most of the treasures which were in the tomb have been transferred to the Cairo Museum. Nichols says of the richness of this display; it is simply unbelievable. The first room broken into was the ante-chamber:

In this room were rich couches, chairs, jewels, necklaces and ornaments of various kinds. The remarkable thing was that much of the furniture such as couches and chairs are similar to those we use today. Most of this furniture was overlaid with pure gold and the treasures in this one room were worth many thousands of dollars.

It was a tremendous job to take care of this treasure and guard it there in the mountainous valley, miles from civilization. In the meantime, Lord Carnarvon hastened to England and sold the exclusive right of all news of King Tut's tomb to the London Times. It was February of 1923 before all the treasure found in this first room was catalogued and taken to places of safety.

When they were ready to open the next chamber in February, both Mr. Carter and Lord Carnarvon were there. As they cut thru the wall they came to heavy golden doors with great bronze hinges. These doors were unbolted and forced open. Here was a smaller chamber and another set of doors were found bolted and sealed with unbroken seals which opened into the real tomb.

Upon the walls of the inner chamber containing the shrine were paintings and inscriptions of texts from the Book of the Dead. Of course, many of the treasures were so deteriorated with age that the intrinsic value is not great, but there are many exceptions. There were alabaster vases which were hewn from alabaster blocks at the quarries of Oswan. Two life sized wooden statues of King Tut had upon them head-dresses covered with gold leaf, gold collar, bracelets, slippers, etc. These figures were awe-inspiring and each had in the right hand a heavy gold walking stick and in the left a gold mace. The eyes and eyebrows were inlaid with pure gold.

I recently saw much of this treasure found in the ante-rooms and some from the inner shrine, in the museum in Cairo. It is said to be by far the most marvelous collection of gold and treasure, jewels and ornaments ever found in a tomb.

The most wonderful of all the vast treasure, however, was found in the shrines containing the body. The first of these shrines is a great chest seventeen feet long, twelve feet wide and nine feet high. This was overlaid with pure gold all over the outside. There was seven hundred and twenty-six square feet of gold covering on the outside of this shrine, and practically as much on the interior.

When the great golden doors of this outer shrine were forced open, the whole thing was found to be overlaid with gold on the inside also. In this was a second shrine fifteen feet long, ten feet wide and six feet high. This, too, was overlaid with pure gold on the outside but painted on the inside. There were four hundred and fifty square feet of pure gold on the exterior of this shrine.

When the golden doors of this second shrine were opened, it was found that within was a third shrine thirteen feet long, nine feet wide and five feet high. This was overlaid with pure gold, there being three hundred and thirty-seven square feet of gold on the exterior. The interior was only painted.

Inside this was a fourth shrine also overlaid with pure gold, there being two hundred and fifty square feet of gold on this as it was eleven feet long, eight feet wide and four and one half feet high. Inside this was the great mummy case in which was the body of the monarch who died more than three thousand years ago.

In addition to the gold on these shrines there was one hundred and fifty square feet of gold plate on large couches, walking sticks, staves, scepters and maces. Then there were gold plated chariots, etc., so that all told there was more than three thousand square feet of gold plate. This alone was worth an immense fortune. It is actually said that the treasure in King Tut's tomb was worth fifty million dollars.

Another Big Deal

Editor Douglass of the Oklaloosa News, claims to have received a proposal of marriage from a woman worth $50,000. We've known men to jump at all sorts of foolish speculatibns, but we have always given the women credit for having more sense. When a woman with fifty thousand dollars is willing to spend the whole wad for one Florida editor, when she could get every quill driver in the state at a dollar and ninety-eight cents each, it shows mighty poor judgment. She'd buy gold bricks and pay fancy prices for hook-worms.

Fifty thousand dollars!

There isn't any such money.—De funiak Springs (Florida) Herald.

The Great Lakes Being Drained

The recent imbroglio in regard to the Chicago Drainage Canal is going to wake up a mighty lot of heretofore sleepy-heads and we are glad the newspapers are giving it publicity. The Dearborn Independent calls it just plain "water steal" and no other word seems applicable. For a number of years Chicago has been drawing off lake water in a gigantic spigot at the rate of 10,000 cubic feet per second, and at this rate we shall become a dry hole before many years. Who among us would care to see the beautiful great lakes surrounding Michigan reduced to small muddy inland lake? Not many we imagine And that is what is coming as sure as fate unless Chicago Drainage Canal is shut off. Chicago does not own one twentieth of the great Lakes yet she boldly defends the right to sap our water supply. This should not be so—Let the great city make arrangements to turn her filthy sewerage into other channels. Neither do we propose to allow beautiful Lake Michigan to be polluted with excretia from the teeming thousands, Chicago must come away from it.

"Chicago began "stealing bases" on the amount of water taken partly because more water was needed for the original purpose for which any of it was conceded. She got up to 10,000 feet a second, they say. That excess was stopped by the supreme court until a legal permit was granted.

Now such a permit has been granted, legally, by the secretary of war, for a diversion of 8,000 feet, not so much as Chicago was taking, yet more than the original permit.

Meantime Chicago has been directed to devise a sewage disposal system which will not take so much water, and to participate to the extent of its liability therefor, in the cost of oompensating works for the readjustment of lake levels.

Chicago used the withdrawn water on its way down stream to produce electric power which was the proper and economical thing to do. Nobody was the worse off. If it hadn't been used industry, which is valuable to the country wherever carried on, would have been just so much worse off as may be calculated by the value of the power produced.

Now that the condition of nearly everybody going stark mad over the subject has passed, it becomes the duty of sensible people interested in lake navigation to initiate proposals and have them carried out, in the direction of erecting compensating works which will restore the old levels. This is a perfectly feasible engineering project which involves calculation, design and expenditure, but not hot air."

Ingham Officers After Dance Halls

The annual J-Hop at the University of Michigan used to be so odoriferous that the faculty stopped them altogether or banned them. This season the faculty has consented to the ball under certain restrictions. The Ingham county sheriff says that of course every dance hall proprietor is sure he is running the right kind of place, and if he isn't he cant help himself. But he is convinced that some of the proprtetors have very little concern about how the dances are run just so they can cash in on them, which means that they are all willing to shut one eye all the time and both eyes part of the time as long as the cash rolls in. The sheriff says:

"I am positive that parents do not know where their young daughters and sons are and of the dangers lurking around these dances. Cheek dancing, toddling, undue hesitation and other immoral and suggestive dancing is going to be stopped around these public dances and bottle toting is going to be more than frowned on, and I ask the co-operation of every decent, respectable citizen to help.

You can't say "decent" dancing to some of these proprietors. You've got to put it in print in order that all may have fair warning; a set of rules such as have been adopted in several cities and posted in each pavilion about the county, and if they are not obeyed complaints will be made to the cours to have them locked up as nuisances."

The rules are as follows in Ingham county:

1. No shadow or spotlight dances allowed.

2. Moonlight dances not allowed where a single light is used to illuminate the hall. Lights may be shaded to give hall dimmed and illuminated effect.

3. All unnecessary shoulder or body movement or grotesque dances positively prohibited.

4. All unnecessary hesitation, rocking from one foot to the other and see-sawing back and forth of the dancers will be prohibited.

5. No loud talking, undue familiarity or suggestive remarks unbecoming in the least to any lady or gentleman will be tolerated.

POSITION OF DANCERS

1. Right hand of gentleman must not be placed below the waist uor over the shoulder, nor around the lady's neck. Ladies' right hand and gentleman's left hand clasped and extended at least six inches from the body, and must not be folded across the chest of the dancers.

2. Heads of dancers must not touch. No toddling.

MUSIC

No beating of the drum to produce jazz effect will be allowed.

Any and all persons violating any of these rules will be subject to expulsion from the hall, also arrest for disorderly conduct.

Hugh Silsby, Sheriff

We have noted that our remarks about dancing heretofore have not been very cordially received by a certain class but we respectfully call the attention of the public to recent rulings of the police in Ingham county. Nobody on this earth can say that the police force are influenced in the least by prejudice old woman's notions or prudery. Their sole basis for putting on the ban is what they know about the limits young people will go to be downright ornery. Why the students at Ann Arbor got so bad that they would go to Detroit and Ypsilanti and indulge in spells of obscenity called dancing, which if made public, would have dazed old Nick, himself, and it is a marvel that the faculty can see their way clear to allow any kind of toe exercise at all.

YOUNG FARMER PLEADS GUILTY

STATE DETECTIVE UNCOVERS CONCLUSIVE PROOF OF MURDER OF WIFE

When Ralph Lindsley, a young farmer of St. Joseph county, pleaded guilty in circuit court to the murder of his wife, he admitted the facts which had been disclosed by unusual detective work.

One morning Lindsley drove into Sturgis and reported to the chief of police that Mrs. Lindsley had committed suicide by shooting herself. The coroner and other officials found the woman's body lying in a pool of blood, with a bullet wound in the forehead, and a revolver lying close by.

H. Erickson of the state Bureau of Identification was sent for and took a complete set of photographs, also taking the finger-prints found upon the revolver barrel. Lieutenant John S. Palmer, in charge of the criminal investigation bureau of the Department of Public Safety then took the case.

Tests were made with the revolver which showed that the woman could not have shot herself, inasmuch as powder burns were lacking which would have occurred if she had held the gun

In seeking a clue to the motive for the killing, Lieutenant Palmer learned that Lindsley had been attentive to a young married woman of the neighborhood. Search was made and the fragments of a 16-page letter, which had been read and torn up and the pieces thrown away, were gathered, it took a day and a night to put the letter together and then the motive was plain.

Lindsley had planned to get rid of his wife and also of the other woman's husband, it appeared.

Finger prints of the revolver and measurements showing the direction of the bullet and approximate fixing of the height fro mwhich it was fired were other details entering into the case.

Finally, the burden of evidence being too strong to be overcome, Lindsley came into court and pleaded guilty. He is now serving his sentence in Jackson prison.

MICHIGAN HAS NAVY ON DETROIT RIVER

Commissioner Harry H. Jackson of the Department of Public Safety might now add the title of "admiral" to his name. He is in command of a fleet of four armed speed boats which are now plying the border waters between Ontario and Michigan. Their mission is to do away with the smuggling, principally of liquor, which has been such a heavy traffic in the narrow waters.

Inasmuch as Ecorse, in Wayne county, has been the receiving point for a very large share of the liquor slipped across the border, it will receive particular attention from the fleet both by day and by night.

Several smuggling vessels were picked up in the first week of operations of the fleet.

> SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him.

The girl, after a moment's hesitation, preceded Mrs. Fraser into the building. She saw a long corridor, with a number of doors on either side, and the stairs in front of her.

"You would like to see the building, Miss Wentworth?" asked the matron. "Or perhaps you are tired and would prefer to go to your room."

"No, I should like to see it. Have you many patients?"

"Only Mrs. Dana. She's always here, you know. There was a boy with a broken arm, but he left this morning. In winter, though, we're often crowded. It isn't much of a place, Miss Wentworth, but we do a little good. This is the doctor's apartment. He sleeps here; next door is the clinic, and next to that the operating room. Here we keep the supplies. This is my room. Mr. Myers, the secretary, has his room opposite the doctor's. This is the dining room, and here is the kitchen. Now I'll show you your room upstairs, Miss Wentworth."

The corridor above was a replica of the one below. At the head of the stairs a little passage branched off toward a large window in the wall, with a door to one side of it.

"Mrs. Dana occupies this room," said the matron. "Perhaps the doctor mentioned her?"

"Doctor Lancaster said something—"

"She is out of her mind, poor woman, but she is perfectly quiet. You see, Miss Wentworth, she is like an infant mentally. She will not trouble you. Excuse me a moment."

She drew a key from the bunch that hung at her waist and unlocked the door very softly, and with a certain furtiveness, Joan thought. Looking in, the girl saw a strikingly handsome woman of about seven and thirty years, seated in a chair beside a window, with a shawl over her knees. She was in a dressing gown, and her hair hung over her shoulders in two braids. She did not look up or stir as the matron entered, and Mrs. Fraser, after closing the door behind her, presently came out and locked it again.

"I'll show you your room now, Miss Wentworth," she said. "You will be alone on this floor except for Mrs. Dana, but you are not afraid of her?"

"Not in the least. Is she incurable?"

"Yes, quite, poor thing. She has sat in that chair all day for nearly three years."

"And never goes out?"

"Out? No, we don't let her out. It might excite her. But I am not supposed to speak about the cases. It's very sad, though. She comes of a very good family, and they neglected her when she was in trouble, Miss Wentworth, and she's as good as dead to everyone now. She never speaks, but I don't know whether she could. I've never heard her since I came here three years ago. This is the ward. And this is your room."

The open doors along the corridor had revealed clean little rooms with iron bedsteads and plain furniture; the room at the end of the passage, however, was well furnished, with a heavy new carpet and old mahogany furniture. Outside the window, through the twilight, appeared the distant mountains.

Joan, turning, was surprised to see Mrs. Fraser watching her intently. As their eyes met the matron lowered her own in some confusion. There was a furtiveness about her glance that momentarily revived Joan's uneasiness. It was a strange journey, and Doctor Lancaster's behavior had been strange. Then there was the man Myers. Joan felt a sudden sinking of the heart; she was almost regretful that she had come.

A colored maid brought up her suitcase.

"This is Lucy," said the matron. "She will do anything you tell her. She sleeps overhead in the attic. And my room is underneath," she added; "so if you should want anything at any time, just tap on the radiator, and I'll come up at once. And supper will be ready as soon as you are."

In the hall Joan found Mrs. Fraser, ten minutes later, talking to the secretary.

"Miss Wentworth, this is Mr. Myers," she began.

"We've met already," said Myers, scrutinizing her closely. He seemed now to wear the same furtive air as Mrs. Fraser; it seemed part of the atmosphere of the institution. Joan had perceived it in the coachman, too.

"Miss Wentworth is to have charge of the nursing under Doctor Jenkins," said Mrs. Fraser.

"I hope I shan't conflict with—" began Joan doubtfully.

"Not at all, not at all," said Myers, speaking with false heartiness. "I hope we shall all get along well together."

Joan refused to face the problem of Myers' undoubted hostility. She went into the dining room, and found to her relief that the table was only laid for one.

"Mr. Myers has had supper?" she asked.

"You are to have your meals alone, Miss Wentworth," answered the matron.

"But I should not wish—"

"It is the doctor's orders," said Mrs. Fraser, in a tone of finality.

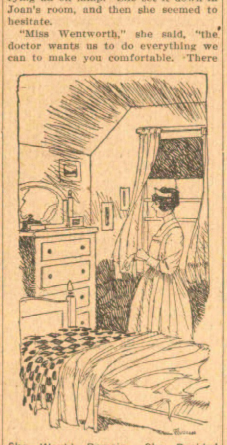
Coming in with the dessert, Mrs. Fraser found her nodding at the table. The girl had begun to feel an intense fatigue after the all-day journey. She began to realize, too, that her work at the hospital had been harder than she had known.

"I believe I shall go straight to bed," she said.

"The best thing you can do, Miss Wentworth. Everybody feels sleepy when they first arrive here. It's the hill air. You must rest well, Miss Wentworth, and please remember it's you who give the orders."

She preceded her up the stairs, carrying an oil lamp. She set it down in Joan's room, and then she seemed to hesitate.

"Miss Wentworth," she said, "the doctor wants us to do everything we can to make you comfortable. There isn't likely to be any work unless some patient comes in. You were not to attend Mrs. Dana, I think?"



She Would Remain. She Decided That While She Was Dressing.

"I was told not."

"That's so, Miss Wentworth." The matron's air was a very decided one, and again conveyed the impression of something hidden, which was, further, meant to remain hidden. "The doctor wired me that. I don't suppose he said anything about Mrs. Dana to you? Or—or Mr. Myers?"

Her stealthy watchfulness now seemed of ominous portent, and the matron made no attempt to suppress the eagerness with which she awaited Joan's answer.

"No, Doctor Lancaster said nothing," answered the girl.

Then, seeing that the matron was still regarding her doubtfully, she added:

"But is not Doctor Jenkins resident here? I have not seen him yet, you know."

The matron stared at her in astonishment. "Why, Miss Wentworth, that was Doctor Jenkins who drove you up from the station! Didn't you know?" she asked.

"That was Doctor Jenkins?"

"I thought Doctor Lancaster would have told you about him. He's a graduate of Johns Hopkins. Old Doctor Lancaster wanted to build up an institution here where we hill people could work among our own. But the plan fell through. You see, the hospital in Avonmouth got hold of most of the money, and then—there were other difficulties. I don't know about them—I've only been here three years, and Doctor Jenkins wasn't graduated then, and we never pay attention to the gossip of the villagers."

She checked herself hastily, as if she was afraid of compromising herself.

"Doctor Jenkins has given up his life to the work here," she continued. "He lives at Millville, but we hope some time that Doctor Lancaster will build up the place again, if only—if only he—"

There was almost a look of agony on her face, and again she turned her eyes upon Joan's face as if to search out her thoughts. Then, with an abrupt "good night," she turned away.

Joan called to her as she was leaving the room. "Mrs. Fraser," she said, "I understood there was a patient here besides Mrs. Dana."

The matron turned slowly round. "There was the boy who left this morning," she said inquiringly.

"But I understood from Doctor Lancaster—at least, he didn't tell me in so many words, but he gave me to understand that there was a special case here, requiring care and sympathy."

The matron stared at her. "No, there's nobody," she said. "Nobody except—"

Suddenly she uttered a convulsive sound, and, putting her hands over her face, ran from the room. Joan heard her stumbling down the corridor outside as if she had gone blind.

She stood irresolute in her room. Her sleepiness was gone; she was afraid, and she seemed to have got out of her depth. It had begun with John Lancaster's strange behavior in his office the evening before. She had not been able then to reconcile him in any way with the Lancaster whom she had seen, smug, self-satisfied and vain, in the operating room, the bully who kept the nurses in agitation and fear, though he was the traditional John Lancaster of whom she had heard. Then there was the man Myers, equally strange; and the matron. Some mystery was at the heart of it all; and Joan was the more afraid because the reason for her fear was unknown to her.

Her sleepiness was gone. She stood beside the window, looking out into the darkness. A whippoorwill was calling monotonously among the pines; here and there among the hills a solitary light was twinkling. The air was cool and balsam scented. It was like the dearly remembered days at home. But in the heart of that peace was apprehension.

Looking back now, Joan thought that she had undertaken a rash and extraordinary adventure in coming so far from Avonmouth alone, and at the proposal of a man whose reputation was an evil one. She would go home on the morrow.

Something was wrong, and in spite of his apparent kindness an inner prompting warned her to beware of Lancaster. He was at the heart of all this, and had enmeshed her in some scheme for his own purposes. She locked her door and went to bed, to sleep restlessly.

Chapter V

When she awakened it was morning. The sun was streaming brightly into the room. Through the window Joan saw a scene of exquisite beauty in the rolling hills, the winding road, the forest glades. Underneath the chickens were scrambling for the corn which the matron was flinging to them. A thousand birds were awing, the universal robin and the bluebird of her beloved home. The dew lay heavy on the leaves and grass. Joan felt a sudden ecstasy. This was her own country, and she had come back to it. Her fears were dissipated with the night shadows.

She would remain. She decided that while she was dressing. And yet a doubt was in her heart. And with it came the remembrance of something that had disturbed her during the night. Filtering into her consciousness came the recollection of an automobile rolling up to the door, and of men's voices conversing in low tones under her window. Then the machine had rolled away. It must have been about two in the morning.

Perhaps a patient had been brought to the institute, thought the girl, as she went downstairs. Mrs. Fraser's door was closed, and the only person astir seemed to be the colored maid, who nodded and smiled as she looked up from her sweeping. Joan began to pace the long verandah in front of the building, looking out across the hills and thinking over her situation.

Perhaps it was only morbidness, or mental fatigue, that had made her read things in the faces of Myers and Mrs. Fraser which did not exist there. Perhaps the day would disclose her position more definitely.

She was walking past the open door of the building when she saw a man leaving the doctor's room. It was Myers, the secretary. He saw Joan and came briskly out upon the verandah.

"Good morning, Miss Wentworth," he said, in his rasping tones. "Pleasant weather, isn't it? Much better here than in the heat of Avonmouth!"

"How do you do, Mr. Myers," said Joan, trying to overcome her instinctive disgust of the man. "You have a new patient here, haven't you?"

He looked at her with a sort of quizzical shrewdness. "What makes you think that, Miss Wentworth?" he inquired.

> Evidently the institution is a place of mystery. And what brings Doctor Lancaster?

Old Weather "Saws" Based on Good Sense

Admiral Fitzroy, who invented the barometer and commanded the brig Beagle on its expedition to the American coast in 1831, declares that most of the old "saws" regarding weather are reliable and based on common-sense investigation. As a weather expert he commended an old saying to the effect that the glow of dawn high in the sky denotes wind, and a low dawn fair weather. He bade us believe that soft-looking, delicate clouds mean wind-fair weather, and hard, ragged ones wind. Mist on a hilltop means rain and wind if it stays long or comes down—fine weather if it rises and disperses. Rain is due when distant objects look near as on what is called a good hearing day. And rain is foretold by pigs carrying straws to sties. The pig as a prophet appears in an old riddle: Question: Why is a storme to followe presently when a company of hogges runne crying home? Answer: A hog is most dull and of a melancholy nature; and so by reason doth foretell the raine that cometh. In time of raine, most cattell doe pricke up their ears; as for example an asse will, when he perceiveth a storme of raine or hail doth follow.

The Editor Discourses on Ministers

The erstwhile editor of a Florida paper that recently came to our notice, gets up quite a sweat writing certain gushings concerning his local minister. We can truthfully say we have ever found little to criticise in the local ministers we have known, and right now we have no talking timber whatever, but this item in the Florida sheet appealed to us as being funny, so here it is:

"A PASTOR'S FAREWELL"

A minister in a certain town in Indiana took permanent leave of his congregation in the following pathetic manner:

"Brothers and Sisters, I come to say good bye. I don't think God loves this church because none of you ever die. I don't think you love each other because I never marry any of you. I don't think you love me because you have not paid my salary. Your donatious are mainly mouldy fruit and wormy apples, and by their fruits ye shall know them.

"Brothers, I am going away to a better place—I have been called for chaplain of a penitentiary. Where I go ye cannot come yet I shall prepare a place for you, and may the Lord have mercy on your souls. Good-bye."

Funeral services for Mrs. Martin VanTassel were conducted Sunday by Rev. Scott at the M. E. church. Mrs. VanTassel passed away Saturday following a stroke of apoplexy which occurred Monday. Deceased was 76 years of age and had lived at Somerset Center and Jerome most of her life with the exception of several years spent in New York state and near Jonesville. Mrs. Van Tassell who was a life long member of the Somerset ctr. church put into practice those tenents of Christianity which many of us follow only in theory. She is survived by the husband, one brother Benjamin Greek and one sister Dorcas Greek.

Last week through the machinations of Robert Frantz, local merchants came to an agreement whereby their places of business are to be closed on Sunday. Now if only something sensational would occur on any Sunday in Jerome, various correspondents of the many Daily Blats throughout the state would point their fingers at this locality and say "There is a fine example of the bad results of Blue laws or Sunday laws when they are put into effect by the influence of church people" but Mr. Ostrom informs us that business men usually favor Sunday closing laws rather than oppose them and Mr. Pullen voices his approval. of course, Sunday laws are probably religious laws as has been pointed out by Rep, Coleman of Penn the supreme court of North Carolina and the supreme court of California and if Sunday laws are religious laws then Sunday laws are the result of the union of church and state, a thing which Protestants usually deplore undoubtedly the keeping of Sunday as a day of rest should be left to the individual rather than to the lawmakers and this is what has been done in Jerome. The community thanks the merchants.

Mrs. Wealthy Clement aged 78 years passed away Sunday at her home in Coldwater. Mrs. Clement was formerly Wealthy Seeley and was born in Moscow township. She was a member of the Jerome M. E. church for a number of years but changed her membership with her residence. She is survived by one brother Ralph Seeley who is the last of a family of five children. Funeral services were held Wednesday in Coldwater with burial in Jerome cemetery. Mrs. Clement had many friends here.

Mrs. Merl Morehead, Mrs. W. E. Anson and Mr. and Mrs. Ola Baker were in Hillsdale Sunday.

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

Radio in Spain

Spain was almost the last of the older nations to take up radio seriously; but now over 100,000 licenses have been issued for the installing of receiving sets. There are many amateur broadcasting stations in the towns, employing up to the maximum power, which is 100 watts. It is prohibited for an amateur to use a set with a wave-length between zero and 120 meters, so that very short wave transmission is virtually impossible for them. All amateur transmitting sets are subject to a tax of 200 pesetas which must be paid to the Spanish government annually.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Navy Board Declares Battleship Still Is Backbone of Our Naval Defense.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CONTRARY to the opinion of Brig. Gen. William Mitchell and those who support his contentions, the battleship is still the backbone of naval defense and the airplane, while a very valuable arm, will always be an auxiliary instrument of warfare against whose attacks the battleship can be made practically invulnerable. Such is the finding of the special board of the navy created by President Coolidge to investigate the claims of those who asserted that aircraft could sweep navies from the seas.

This board, headed by Admiral Eberle, chief of naval operations, reported last week. Its conclusions, summarized, are these:

"The battleship is the element of ultimate force in the fleet, and all other elements are contributory to the fulfillment of its function as the final arbiter in sea warfare. The other elements have their important, and at times, indispensable functions.

"Aviation has introduced a new and highly important factor in warfare, both on land and sea. It was utilized on an enormous scale and with great effectiveness in land operations during the World war, but did not seriously influence sea operations. Its influence on naval warfare undoubtedly will increase in the future, but the prediction that it will assume paramount importance will not be realized.

"The airplane (heavier than air) is limited in performance by physical laws.

"The airship (lighter than air) has some valuable characteristics, but due to great vulnerability, is of doubtful value in war.

"Aircraft cannot operate from territory that is not controlled by the military or naval forces of their own country.

"Airplanes cannot occupy territory, nor can they exercise control of the sea.

"Airplanes cannot reach distant overseas areas under their own power with any effective military load, and therefore, cannot operate there offensively or defensively until supplied with weapons and fuel.

"The battleship of today, while not invulnerable to airplane attack, still possesses very efficient structural protection, as shown by the experiments on the Washington. The battleship of the future can be so designed as to distribution of her armor on decks and sides, and as to interior subdivision, that she will not be subject to fatal damage from the air.

"The effect of plunging long range gun projectile hits on a ship's deck has now become closely analogous to the effect of hits by heavy aerial bombs.

"By armoring the battleship's deck with six or seven inches of armor, we effectively meet any practicable attack from the air and also attack by gun projectiles fired at the greatest probable battle ranges.

"The interior subdivision will resist any mining effect from aerial bombs. It cannot be said, therefore, that air attack has rendered the battleship obsolete.

"The observation value of the airplane has been extended to assisting gunnery by observing and reporting the fall of shot relative to the target.

"Airplanes have demonstrated their great value to the fleet in scouting, observation and bombing. The use of torpedo planes, gas and smoke screens is still in the process of development. Airplane carriers are necessary elements of a properly constituted fleet to carry airplanes to the scene of action."

As to the plan of unifying navy and army aviation in a separate department of the government, urged by General Mitchell and many others, the board says it would be most injurious to the continued efficiency of the fleet and is a step that should not be taken.

The board made recommendations for a rather elaborate immediate building program to be completed in three years at a cost of $80,000,000 a year. For this the President has substituted this initial program costing $30,000,000:

1. Modernization of three of the coal-burning battleships.
2. Continuation of the construction of the two aircraft carriers.
3. Three million dollars for airplanes for the carriers. (This is in addition to $1,000,000 for this purpose included in the budget for 1926.)
4. Laying down and commencing the construction of two 10,000-ton cruisers.
5. Commencing the construction of gunboats for patrol service on the Yangtze river.

COINCIDENT with the publication of this report came the story from Los Angeles of the performance of navy bombing squadron No. 2 under Lieutenant Commander J. Strong. From a height of 7,200 feet the bombers made 20 direct hits on a small sea target that was being towed at 15 miles an hour. Strong's comment was: "Brigadier General Mitchell was correct as to effectiveness of air bombardment on war vessels. We have known it for a long time. Today we proved it."

He added the assertion that his bombers were 1,200 feet above effective anti-aircraft gun range and said the test was made more difficult than expected because a bank of clouds necessitated much preliminary maneuvering to get a peek at the tiny target.

WASHINGTON dispatches of the same date declared that President Coolidge had decided to discipline General Mitchell for casting discredit on his superiors in the War department and presumably would give him the choice of accepting removal from the office of assistant chief of the army air service and reduction to his regular rank of colonel, or resignation from the service. Mitchell is quoted as saying he would accept the demotion and continue to work for a unified air service.

High officers of the army and navy appeared before the house committee on aircraft to tell it the nation's actual situation as to defense by air, and while their testimony was not made public, it was learned that they showed that the country was utterly unprepared to resist attack, so far as aircraft are concerned.

Another interesting witness was Frank B. Gorin, secretary of the Chemical Warfare association, who told the committee in polite language that Secretary of the Navy Wilbur did not know what he was talking about when he minimized the possibilities of poison gases in war. Gorin laughed at Wilbur's statement that it would require 5,000 planes and 3,700,000 pounds of mustard gas to attack a city the size of Washington. From 12 to 16 planes, he said, could demoralize a manufacturing center like Pittsburgh, and one ton of gas would cover a territory a mile square.

Eleven planes from Selfridge field have been carrying out winter maneuvers in Michigan that have taught the aviators most valuable lessons especially in the quick handling of the planes in extremely cold weather.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, it was admitted last week, is sounding out the powers on the advisability of calling another naval disarmament conference to extend the Washington treaty limitations to auxiliary craft. Our ambassadors have been carrying on preliminary conversations in London, Tokyo and Rome and are said to have met with considerable encouragement there. France also, of course, has been consulted but her attitude is not yet revealed. Her assent is necessary. A London paper says Mr. Kellogg, the retiring ambassador, is bringing to the President a message from Foreign Secretary Chamberlain stating that Great Britain would welcome American initiative in the calling of such a conference, which probably means that the British government recognizes that the Geneva peace protocol is practically dead. In Tokyo it was said Foreign Minister Shidehara would insist on preliminary conversations in that city to fix the agenda of the meeting.

THAT Germany's warlike preparations are continuing and that the Berlin government has not been acting in good faith are the charges made in the report of the interallied control commission presented to Marshal Foch's Versailles committee, and the charges are supported by a great array of alleged facts. With this comes reiteration of the French government's position that evacuation of the whole or a part of the Rhineland would remove France's last tangible pledge for security against aggression without giving anything but vague promises to replace it.

THE tragedy of Sand cave, in Kentucky, reached its climax and conclusion when the miners sinking the shaft for the rescue of Floyd Collins got down to the unfortunate young man and found he had been dead for several days. To release his body from the imprisoning boulder that fell on his foot January 30 would have been difficult, and dangerous to others, so it was decided to make the cave his tomb. Funeral services were held on top of the hill and the entrances to the cavern were filled up. Above the shaft will rise a rock cairn that will stand as a memento of the unselfish and brave efforts of those who toiled for many days and nights to extricate the trapped man.

CONGRESS has now authorized a project that has been long urged by citizens of the North and the South as a symbol of national unity, and by artists and architects as well. It is the Arlington Memorial bridge to link the Lincoln Memorial on the north shore of the Potomac with the Arlington National cemetery and the old home of Gen. Robert E. Lee on the south side. The bridge is to cost $14,750,000 and is to be the most beautiful structure of the kind in the world. It will be completed within the next six years.

IF THE senate has its way, the salaries of members of both houses will be raised from $7,500 a year to $10,000, and those of cabinet members from $12,000 to $15,000. This was provided for by a senate amendment to the legislative appropriation bill which was adopted without a record vote, despite the warm opposition of Senator Willis of Ohio and some others. It was considered likely the amendment would be approved in conference and accepted by the house.

WILLIAM M. JARDINE, president of the Kansas State Agricultural college, is to be secretary of agriculture after March 4. President Coolidge selected him from the field of some 200 candidates after long and careful consideration, for he feels that the operations of the Department of Agriculture will have much to do with the success of his administration, as well as with the prosperity of the country. Doctor Jardine, who began his career as a cow puncher in Montana, is a practical as well as a theoretical farmer and has a thorough knowledge of farm marketing.

DR. MARION LE ROY BURTON, president of the University of Michigan and one of the country's leading educators, died at Ann Arbor after several months of illness. He was a native of Iowa and was only fifty years old. Before going to Michigan in 1920 he had been president of Smith college and of the University of Minnesota. In the Republican national convention last June he made the speech placing Calvin Coolidge in nomination.

Frederic W. Upham, for years until last June the national treasurer of the Republican party and one of the leading business men of Chicago, died at Palm Beach, Fla., where he had gone in the hope of regaining his health. He was national committeeman from Illinois.

M. H. De Young, founder and publisher of the San Francisco Chronicle and one of the Golden Gate city's most notable figures, passed away rather suddenly after an emergency operation.

Another death of note was that of Addison G. Proctor of St. Joseph, Mich., who was the last surviving member of the Republican convention of 1860 in Chicago that nominated Abraham Lincoln for the presidency.

Claims America Had First Civilization

Springfield, Ill.—Ample proof exists for the belief that American civilization antedates that of either Europe or Asia, says Edward W. Payne, Springfield, noted collector of relics in the Middle West, who addressed the Illinois Academy of Science on "The Stone Age in the Mississippi Valley."

"Most people believe the highest civilization ever known on this continent was that of some 350,000 savages here at the time of its discovery by the white race," he asserts. "The common explanation is that the progenitors of these savages came across Bering strait from Asia and that the Indians were their descendants.

"The fact is that people from this continent went from here to Asia. I base this opinion on the fact that relics and curios found in the Mississippi valley are all duplicated in other parts of the world.

"Hairpins illustrate the case. The Chinese made a certain hairpin from jade. Many are beautifully carved, but none give evidences of age which hairpins of similar design, found in Arkansas, show.

"Another stone found near Winchester, Ill., provides another clue. It is beautifully made and of an unusual shape, but not until I had talked with an army captain who had served in the Philippines did I know its use. He said it was a bath brush. In the interior of the islands he had seen Filipino women washing their children with a similar device."

SICK WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Macon, Georgia.—"During the Change of Life I suffered with my whole right side and could not lie on my left side. I was in bed about two months and could not get up only as my son would lift me. After taking it for two weeks I could get out of my bed by myself. I am now 63 years old and in better health and stronger than ever in my life. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound to many suffering women, young and old, and you may use my name anywhere as long as you please. I will be glad to answer any letters sent to me."—Mrs. F. B. HEADDEN, 5 Holt Avenue, Macon Georgia.

Freak Lightning

A freak bolt of lightning struck the upraised shovel of a workman at Salem, Mass., split into three parts, and jumped to there different houses. In one house it stunned six-months-old twins. Weather-boarding and plaster were torn from the second house. The third house was a bungalow, just completed, which was damaged slightly. The workmen were uninjured.

Port Huron—A program calling for the construction of more than 20 miles of gravel roads in St. Clair County this year has been outlined by county highway officials. Hearings on the projects will be held in March.

Battle Creek—Mary Gogoff, 13-year old daughter of a wealthy merchant here; known as "the girl without a country," because of her entry into the United States from Canada was held up by immigration officials, was admitted to the country by Secretary of Labor Davis under $1,000 bond.

Mt. Clemens—The Mt. Clemens city commission has confirmed the result of the special election here authorizing the grant of a new franchise to the Mt. Clemens Gas Light Co. The franchise will supplant the present one granted 30 years ago, which has still three years to run.

Monroe—Thousands of fish are floating or frozen in the ice of the River Raisin, west of the dam in the village of Dundee, 14 miles west of Monroe, according to report received here. It is said that some poisonous substance has been drained into the river. The authorities are investigating.

Manistee—Manistee voters will decide at the spring election whether the city is to have a boulevard lighting system. The proposal provides $5,000 for the first section of the system covering six blocks along the principal street and extensions by approval and appropriation in the future.

New Baltimore—Anti-rabbies treatment has been given Lucy Carpenter and Donald Meldrum, two new Baltimore children as a protection against wounds which they received recently when bitten by a mad dog. An examination of the dogs head made at Ann Arbor, showed that it had the rabbies.

Midland—Life imprisonment in solitary confinement was the sentence imposed upon Victor Badgley, 29 years old, who pleaded guilty to slaying 11-year-old Lena Todd, of Coleman. He was sentenced in Circuit Court here by Judge Ray Hart and was taken to the Branch State Prison at Marquette.

Richmond—Harold "Red" Grange, all-American foot ball star from the University of Illinois, is a "very sick man," his physician, Dr. J. F. McCarthy, announced. Grange is suffering from a relapse of the mumps, with which he was stricken when he came here to deliver an address to Richmond High school students.

Detroit—Patrolman Phelin McDonough, was killed in preventing a robbery of a Brownie drug store at 8200 Hamilton avenue. In a gun battle with two of a trio of prospective holdup men he was shot at close range through the head and expired 30 minutes later in the Henry Ford hospital. The bandits escaped in an automobile.

Sturgis—The Sturgis Memorial hospital, one of the finest and best equipped hospitals in Michigan, has been formally opened. The hospital comprises 21 private rooms, two wards, three surgical rooms, nursery and dining rooms, sun parlors and baths. Miss Annie Hill of Woodstock, Canada, has been named superintendent.

Olivet—Four Winton township girls are seriously injured as the result of a concrete wall falling upon them at school. Several other children escaped injury. The partition was constructed a short while ago to separate the boys' and girls' cloakrooms. It was made of concrete and is said to have been fastened loosely to the walls of the building.

Menominee—For the second time within a year the village of Daggett, Menominee County, was visited by a serious fire, four buildings being destroyed and two persons being injured. A lose of more than $30,000 incurred. The postoffice building, general store of John Dunham, residence of Axel Swanson and barber shop of John Logan were burned.

Hart—Residents of Hart opposed to the construction of a community-owned dam and power plant have asked an injunction in Circuit Court, restraining the village council from carrying out the plans, indorsed recently in a special election. Those signing the petition for an injunction say that their action is brought through fear that taxes here will be considerably increased if the dam and power plant are built.

Ann Arbor—Ordinary dirt is to replace wood and brick in constructing houses if experiments of Prof. F. N. Menefee and R. E. P. Franklin of the University of Michigan mechanical engineering, are followed by general adoption. The experiments have shown, it is claimed, that using only earth and pure sand, mixed with 12 per cent of water, a rigidity capable of maintaining 100 times the weight of the ordinary frame house can be secured. The mixture is tamped in forms, and after drying has the consistency of concrete.

Mt. Clemens—Thirteen fliers from Selfridge field, comprising the first pursuit group of the United States army air service, will leave here under command of Major T. G. Lanphier, commanding officer at Selfridge field, for a series of maneuvers unique in army flying annals. They will head north to Oscoda, where their planes, equipped with an adaption of skis as landing gear, will be put through their paces, testing their usefulness as defense units in a northern clime at a season when neither army nor navy could work efficiently.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

The High Cost of Postponing Permanent Highway Building

Poor motor roads stifle industry and agriculture; waste huge sums annually in high maintenance costs, and greatly increase gasoline, tire and repair bills.

There is not a state, not a county, not a community, that isn't paying a heavy price for having too few permanent roads.

There are still many sections of the country—even whole states—that are trying to operate twentieth century traffic over nineteenth century roads.

This is costing millions of dollars every year, and will keep on costing millions until we have well developed permanent highway systems everywhere.

Even what we often call the more progressive communities are far behind the demands of modern highway traffic with its 16,000,000 motor vehicles.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico, we need more Concrete roads —the roads for twentieth century traffic.

Your highway officials want to be of the greatest possible service to you. Get behind them with ways and means that will provide more Concrete roads and streets. Such an investment will pay you big dividends year after year.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

"Home-Made Thugs"

Thieves, murderers, bootleggers hi-jackers and others of the motley crew of crime do not come out of law abiding homes, and the prevalence of crime and criminal tendencies in youth, finds a Brooklyn grand jury, is an indictment of the domestic hearth. The adult generation has sought by various arguments to lay the responsibility for the waywardness of youth on the war, on the rapid developments of science which have increased leisure and the opportunities for worldly pleasure, on woman's sudden access to freedom, on any argument that was handy. But it is the old generation itself, we are told more and more often now, which is responsible for the ills it attributes to youth. Parents have shirked their responsibilities by ignoring the spiritual welfare of the children, says the Brooklyn grand jury in its presentment to County Judge Vause. Business and pleasure pursuits of parents have deprived their children of the right of loving companionship. "Others by their own defiance of law have taught their children defiance of of law. Law breaking homes do not produce law abiding children. Law breaking breeds law breaking." As we quote it from the press, the presentment goes on:

"An alarming number of children in Brooklyn are growing up with no religious training whatever. A prominent jurist (Judge B. J. Humphrey) recently declared that in his twenty years on the bench he could recall but one of the thousands of criminals brought before him who had a Sunday school training. If this record is to be accepted at its face value, it means that the arch enemies of crime are our religious institutions of whatever creed.

"What are the remedies? We are convinced that the most essential is a revaluation of religious influence in the home. The perfect home is that which trains its sons and daughters not only in mind and body, but also in spirit. We believe the people of Brooklyn must set for themselves a new standard of fealty and devotion to church and synagogue. Let us not send our children to them but go with them and show them that we believe the things we want them to learn are worth while.

"Let us see to it that our children shall have learned the Golden Rule rather than the rule of greed. Let us see to it that they have a square deal. Join the children in their amusement seeking, and insist that their conception of life shall not be corrupted by vicious movies and filthy books.

"Gunmen, thugs and bootleggers are not made in a day. They are the product of homes where laxity and indifference reigned. The criminals of tomorrow are in our homes and school and on our streets today, impressionable, eager to learn looking for a hero to worsnip and a gang to join."

There is no lack of evidence to prove the indictment of the Brooklyn grand jury. Albert B. Hines, director of the Boys' Club, New York, asserts that 80 percent of the crime in this country is committed by men or boys who have had no religious training.

In Brooklyn, he finds, there are only 30,000 boys under religious influence. As he is quoted by Mabel Abbot in the New York World Mr. Hines declares, in common with the Brooklyn grand jury, that

"The home as a source of spiritual culture, educaiion and moral training is not functioning. The boy is turned out on the street for his pleasure. Every boy has about 4,000 hours a year when he is awake. One thousand of these are spent in school, leaving him, perhaps, 2,500 hours to spend on the street.

"To find out what the actual influence of the street are, I made a study some years ago of our neighborhood, with the help of a lot of older boys in the club. We observed the boys of certain blocks on a week day afternoon, in the evening, and on a Sunday afternoon. We found that 24 percent of the boys on the week day afternoon were doing things that were actual violations of law, such as throwing stones at windows, shooting craps, stealing, building fires, etc., and that 50 percent were doing things that were destructive to moral character or dangerous to their lives."

To emphasize the careless attitude of some parents and, in a few cases, their utter disregard for the welfare of their children. Judge George C. Appell, of the Westchester County Juvenile Court, New York, gives some striking evidence. To a Yonkers Herald reporter he cited the case of a little fourteen year old girl who was unfortunate enough to have been thrown in contact with the lowest types of man. She finally came under the eyes of authority, and was brought into court, her mother with her. When the conditions under which her child was living were made known to her, the mother said, "Well, she's got to know some time in her life how rotten men are. Why not let her know it now?" While such an extreme case is fortunately rare, we are told, there are hundreds no less pitiable Frequently girls break down when the full knowledge and understanding of what they have done dawns on them in court. One wailed, "Oh if my mother had only told me all this!" In a series of character tests prepared and reported by Paul F. Voelker in "The Function of Ideals in Social Education," the group which ranked the lowest "is made up of boys who do not seem to have the advantages of good home training, and whose public school training is not designed to improve them in trustworthiness."

The score made by this group was 42.1 percent, while the highest score, 82.3 percent, was made by a Boy Scout group which had been in training two years, thus exemplifying the possibilities of moral training. Boy Scouts in training six months made 80.4 percent and a private school group made 78.2 percent, whereas the score of a public school group was only 56.8 percent, a distressingly low mark.

Is Mars Inhabited?

For many years the astronomers have been debating concerning the likely habitation of the planet Mars. Recent developments in the line of telescopes do not help to any great extent since the star is so far from us that at best its aspect is badly blurred in the most powerful lenses in use on this earth today, but it is reported that scientists on the top of Mount Jungfrau in the Alps using a powerful magnifier have seen some very queer changes and symptons on Mars for which they can offer no excuse. Of course the only belief is imagination and ever will be, but discoveries have shown Mars to be the most similar to our earth of any satellite that roams the heavens. Mars is one and a half times farther from the sun than we, or 128,000,000 miles, hence it is natural to suppose the climate on that planet is much colder than ours, possibly too cold to for any kind of life. The days, as we reckon them, are 40 minutes longer on Mars than with us, and as we suppose our earth looks to them, so Mars looks to us, showing different zones or spots on its surface which may be the results of different temperatures. For instance near the poles of Mars are white caps looking exactly like snow covered mountains would appear at a distance of 128,000,000 miles, but whether this is the correct solution will never be known. It is settled, however, that the surface of Mars changes regularly at stated intervals, because the colors range from green to blue, and vice versa, which leads observers to believe there are seasons of vegetation and seasons of winter and bleakness. Then there are queer markings running straight in all directfons (showing much plainer at times) which some astronomers are pleased to call canals, and according to our laws of nature these lines could not be natural channels but must be the handiwork of some kind of human agency, otherwise they would be crooked and irregular.

Scientists have figured that at the distance of Mars from the sun the temperature at warmest would not be higher than 48 degrees, hence no vegetation such as we have could grow there. White spots appear at times crossing and recrossing the surface and they are pleased to call these clouds which they very much resemble. The polar caps or white spots near the poles in the summer season disappear, only to come again in winter, hence it is natural to suppose that the heat in summer dissipates the snow from these high mountain peaks and the resulting moisture runs down into the valleys and irrigates them causing an abundance of some kind of vegetation.

Some of our scientists would like very much to believe that the residents of that planet are trying to signal to us, since flashes of light at times are recognized on the surface of Mars. When we take into consideration that nothing smaller than 30 miles square can be seen from our earth on Mars the above statements shrivel up like an autumn leaf. It is more than likely that an even larger area than thirty miles square is hardly visible, so that if there are any here who are worrying about the Martians putting up signals to us which we cannot answer they can cease, since nothing short of a forest fire on Mars would be visible in our telescopes up to date. When it is feasible to build machines with 30 times the magnifying power of the biggest telescopes now known it may be possible we shall learn something.

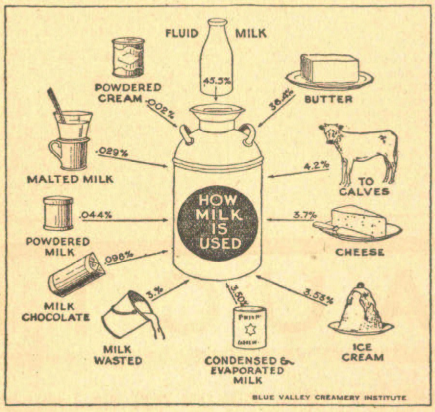
How Nation's Milk Is Used



BLUE VALLEY CREAMERY INSTITUTE

TWENTY cents out of every food dollar is spent for dairy products. Milk or milk products are used in almost every dish included in the daily meal, according to the Blue Valley Creamery institute.

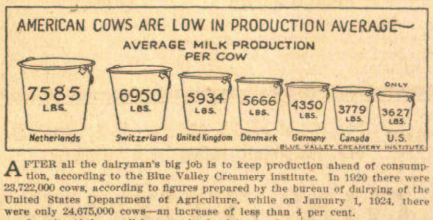
Latest statistics prepared by the bureau of dairying of the Department of Agriculture show that 45.5 per cent of the American milk production, or almost one hundred billion pounds, is used directly in the form of milk. It is estimated that every man, woman and child consumes on an average of 50 gallons of milk each year. This is an increase of eight gallons over the 1917 per capita consumption figures.

The nation is eating more butter as well as drinking more milk. Per capita consumption of butter averages around 16.5 pounds, while in 1918 the average was but 14.6 pounds. More than one-fourth of the yearly milk supply is made into butter, 23.6 per cent of this is turned out as a commercial product.

Americans are not big cheese eaters. The average consumption is less than 3.7 pounds per capita. Only 3.7 per cent of the annual milk production is made in cheese. Condensed milk consumption has more than doubled since 1920 when the average consumption was six pounds per capita. Today the average consumption is 12.69 per capita.

Condensed milk plants last year absorbed 3.5 per cent of the milk produced. Ice cream takes about the same amount. Calves drink around 4.2 per cent. Less than 2 per cent of the year's milk supply is used for such miscellaneous products as powdered milk and cream, malted and canned milk and milk chocolate. It is estimated that around 3 per cent is wasted or lost.

European Cows Yield More Milk



BLUE VALLEY CREAMERY INSTITUTE

AFTER all the dairyman's big job is to keep production ahead of consumption, according to the Blue Valley Creamery institute. In 1920 there were 23,722,000 cows, according to figures prepared by the bureau of dairying of the United States Department of Agriculture, while on January 1, 1924, there were only 24,675,000 cows—an increase of less than 4 per cent.

In spite of the small increase in the dairy herds, production has not lagged behind consumption, due to the fact that by better feeding and breeding more pounds of milk have been produced. However, as the chart shows, the average American cow would have to double her milk yield to equal the production of cows of some of the European nations. It is estimated that the average production per cow in the United States is 3,627 pounds, although many pure bred animals give six and seven times this amount. During the last quarter of a century the United States has increased her production of milk per person about 60 pounds a year, approximately 8 per cent. This increase has been sufficient to a little more than supply the same amount of milk per person that was available in 1900.

Letter From Lawrence Kempton

Lawrence Kempton, who recently went to Mount Vernon Ohio, where he is manager of a Farm Bureau for the county, sent the following letter to his parents and we are publishing the same for the benefit of farmers who use fertilizer It gives them a good idea of how fertilizer is manufactured. Lawrence speaks of Muscle Shoals project and well he may, since the refusal of the government to allow Henry Ford the management of this great plant in our opinion is one of the worst calamities which has happened to the farming population of this country in many years but of course Washington is not controlled by the needs of the farmer—far from it. The lame duck politicians get lots more consideration up there than the man who tills the soil.

"Dear Folks:

I have not writtən you for two weeks so I will try and make up for it this time. Two weeks ago today was the beginning of a very busy week and it sure was a busy one. It was the last week of Farmers Institutes and we had eight in one week. I missed one on Friday as one of the head men at Columbus had the expenses of a bunch of the state service managers paid over to Cincinnati and back, to give us all a chance to go through the largest fertilizer plant in the state and the third largest in the United States. The sales of this enormous plant are entirely controlled by the Ohio Farm Bureau and all of the fertilizer is put up in our own sacks with our name on them. I saw twenty seven thousand tons of acid phosphate in one pile and in all they had about sixty thousand tons piled up curing out and waiting for the spring orders, It gave me a new idea as to the power of thirty seven thousand farmers when banded together. That is the membership of Ohio state at this time. In making commercial fertilizer, this plant uses a Florida rock which is supposed to be better than any other rock in this country. It is mined out and reminded me of the top layer of a crushed stone road, grey in color and very hard, flinty and sharp. This is phosphate rock. This is run through a machine and ground as fine as flour, then it is mixed with sulphuric acid in the ratio of about 8 to 10 in a machine that looks like a giant bread mixer In two and a half minutes a plug is drawn from the bottom as a very rapid chemical action takes place, and if left in too long the composition will get so hard that they have to pick it out.

When it leaves the mixer it goes into a large cement silo where it reaches a temperature of 300° Fahrenheit. Within 30 minutes it is dug out with huge clam-shell buckets operated by a crane and is then piled up to allow it to cool and to permit the chemical action to complete itself. This takes from two to six months and the longer it lays the better. When farmers speak of getting green goods it is because the fertilizer has not laid long enough. This pile becomes nearly as hard as cement and then before it is shipped it is re-ground and sacked. This is the basis for all fertilizer and this mixture makes what is known as 20 per cent acid phosphate. When you order 16 per cent acid they give you 1600 pounds of this 20 per cent and add 400 pounds of sand to make the ton.

For complete fertilizer which also contains ammonia of nitrogen and potash; these ingredients are added in whatever proportion you may desire. For instance an analysis like 2-12-2 which means 2 per cent nitrogen, 12 per cent acid and 2 per cent potash, they would use 200 pounds of nitrates, 1200 pounds of the acid and 200 pounds of potash and 400 pounds of sand which is just to make the ton. The sand has no value. From this you will see that a grade like 2-16-2 would contain no filler. The nitrates are shipped here from Chile and that is where the value of Muscle Shoals lies, in its rich deposits of nitrates. The potash comes from Germany and France.

I left Mt. Vernon on Thursday night and arrived at Cincinnati on Friday morning, and left there on Friday night and was back home for a meeting on Saturday. Sunday I was tired and laid around all day and had a fever that night and was sick all day Monday. Thought sure I was coming down with the la grippe, but threw it off and went to Columbus on Wednesday to the State Live Stock meeting as I was on the program add so of ccurse did not feel that I could miss it.

This week will be mnch easier as it will be just our regular routine and I think that I am glad that the rush of two or three things happening all the while in differənt places is over for a while."

Latest Invention in Radio

One of our most prominent inventors has discovered a device which does away with both batteries as now used in Radio work, if you have electricity in your home This transformer is in the shape of an electric battery and plugs into the light socket. The transformer is a box-like affair the same size as your storage battery, and has terminals. The price is $30.00, and the affair is guaranteed for the life of your Radio set. We presume this will remove one of the worst drawbacks which most people dread, and really will not enter the Radio field, thinking they cannot take the chances.

Lenawee County Corn Grower Sets Record

The honor of having produced the largest corn crop in Michigan last year probably goes to O. E. Ridge, of Deerfield, Lenawee County, according to H. C. Rather crops extension specialist at M. A. C. and secretary of the Michigan Crop Improvement Association.

Ridge harvested seven thousand bushels from his 108 acres of corn, an average yield of nearly seventy bushels to the acre. Otto Wagner, of Riga, won the state honors for yield on a five acre plot last fall, but Mr. Ridge's total production is considered a record for the year, both in total volume and in average yield over a big acreage.

"This yield is unusually remarkable in view of the fact that 1924 was an adverse corn year", says Mr. Rather. "It would come near to being a record in any season. The state average last year was only 26 bushels to the acre."

"Mr. Ridge's unusual crop is attributed mostly to good seed, although good soil and careful cultural practices played an important part. The seed planted was Clement's Whitecap, a well adapted variety.

Safety First Holds Good With Pyrotol

That there will probably be more agricultural explosive used in Michigan this year than in two years previously, and that this added use of explosives calls for special attention to the safety factor in its handling, is the opinion of Larry Livingston, specialist with the M. A. C.

Pyrotol, the cheap but efficient war salvage explosive available for farmers of the state this year, will be responsible for the stimulus in agricultural blasting operations, it is said, and Pyrotol should be handled with the the same respect in regard to danger that is accorded dynamite.

"While Pyrotol is not as sensitive as some dynamite," says Livingston, "it has the same tearing, shattering action as dynamite when it is exploded. After a cap and fuse have been lighted, the blaster should not return until the next day if the charge fails to explode. Work can be conducted in another section of the field with safety, thus leaving the 'hangfire' to take care of itself. Men using Pyrotol should remember that one charge exploding while the blaster is making an examination of a 'hangfire' nearly always results in death.

"Blasting caps which are used with Pyrotol are always a source of danger, unless they are handled carefully. Every method possible should be employed to protect the blaster and others, particularly children, from the blasting caps. Store the caps in a dry, cool place away from children. Use cap crimpers instead of teeth for crimping."

Collins Case Without a Parallel

After 18 days of imprisonment the Collins case is finally settled. Inasmuch as funeral services have been conducted on the hill above the cave where the unfortunate young man was entombed. Undoubtedly the radio fiends have made the most of this case and throughout the United States radios have worked overtime thus demonstrating that wireless is bound to become one of the important factors in news peddling. Not very many moons ago it was prophesied that news would be distributed to the masses by radio at all times, and that public speakers would be installed in the streets which all day and all night would blat out the daily happenings for all who cared to listen, and verily this is being fulfilled. We doubt if there is a town, four corners or locality be it ever so remote in this country where Radio does not touch and edify the thousands. While it is admitted that the apparatus up to date has serious failings, yet the day is not far distant when every whisper on the air will be recorded in all weathers and under all circumstances. If necessary this miracle can work through solid earth in the depths of the mines and tunnels, in the Ocean and anywhere there is air or water. "What Hath God Wrought?"

Book Five Courses For Radio School

Five separate radio extension courses, each running for two weeks, will be included in the special "air" school to be conducted by the M. A. C. from March 2 until May 8, according to announcement made here this week.

Starting with an agricultural engineering course, the school will include courses on crops and soils, livestock gardening, and home making, in the order named. Any radio listener in Michigan can enroll without cost for any or all of these courses, receiving copies of the lectures as they are given and being given an opportunity to qualify for a certificate at the end of the course.

Members of the M. A. C. agricultural faculty will handle the work of the school, two appearing on the program each evening from seven fifteen until eight o'clock, eastern time. Ralph W. Tenny, director of short courses at the college, is handling registration for the radio courses.

Scientific Investigation of Radio

A late magazine devoted to Popular new mecanics says that it is only a matter of a short time when diseases will be diagnosed by the doctor without seeing the patient at all by means of the radio. Appartus which will transmit every sympton of the patient to him sitting in his office 50 or a hundred miles away and he will make a correct diagnosis of the diseese and send medicine. The possibilities of Radio are increasing every hour and 60 years hence there will be some wonderful conditions on this earth by means of it. Scientists are by developing ways and means of using wireless in time of war and the next conflict will be conducted along vastly different lines we imagine. The death ray is now merely a phantasy, but believe us the day is not far off when this "Ray" is going to be far more important in war practice than poison gas now is. Germany as usual has gone farther in Radio science than we, and today she makes a state business of receiving and transmitting world wide messages over the wireless and she has the largest plant we believe of that kind on the globe. From all accounts the Germans are not idle on war science either and no doubt they are busy secretly building munitions and drilling soldiers against that great day when she will renew her struggle for supremacy of the world. Old Kaiser Bill in his castle at Doorn Holland probably seems innocent enough but as a matter of fact that old bruiser is thoroughly informed on every point of government up to the minute in Germany. Germany outwardly seems to be diffident but inwardly she is a raging monster. She supposes she has been underhanded by the Allies and it is too bad the World conflict did not last a short time longer—so as to completely annihilate the Hohenzollerns and their followers from the face of the earth. If war ever breaks out again Germany can be depended upon to use all of these latest inventions and use them with destructive results.

It is possible some of us do not realize that it is necessary we should ballot at the spring elections. It is too bad some neglect this very important part of our citizenship. There are a large number of officials who get their job by just such happenstances as that then when the chaps begin to get in their work we wonder why somebody voted for them. Of course their friends nominated and voted for them, and just because you and I remained away from the polls and did not cast an offsetting vote these men got their office but they represent about one-tenth of the popular voice we should imagine. Now while elections don't always turn out as we might wish when we do vote, is is no sign we should not try to oust the candidates we don't want.

Monday, March 9th, s village election.

NATIONAL HIGHWAYS ASSOCIATION

manufacturing and business centers. A great mass of foreigners come here and get together in groups, but they do not get any real touch of Americanism. They are just as Jewish and just as Italian ten or twenty years after they come here as they were the day they came, because nobody appears to take any particular interest in them. But when an institution like a savings bank begins to take an interest in the problems of the people, to let them feel that here is a group of people engaged in a business that is willing to listen to them, their troubles, their trials, is willing to advise them, willing to steer them straight, willing to be sort of Big Brother to them, I do not think there is any better Americanization work than that being done.

That is the kind of work the progressive savings bank is starting on,—telling people that if they will come to them with their troubles they will be glad to give them the best disinterested advice, to do things for them free, that otherwise they would be charged for by somebody. They are willing to advise them when they get a little more money than the savings bank can take care of, what they can invest it in, or in some cases what not to invest it in.

If the savings and commercial banks all over the country adopt that particular attitude toward our foreign fellow-citizens, it will give them an entirely different view of Americanism. It is this changed attitude that has resulted in the tremendous growth of deposits that have taken place in the savings banks since the war. There has been a different spirit breathed into the relations between the depositors and the men on the other side of the counter.

MORE BACKBONE, LESS WISHBONE

Why not think on the matter of wishbones and backbones and decide to take the power out of our wishbones and put it in our backbones? That's the place we need it if we are to accomplish things worth while.—Banker-Farmer.

The raising of the revenue required to conduct our government is intimately connected with our economic welfare. If it is done by wise and just laws, the burden will be most easily borne. But if the method of taxation is not sound disaster will follow, reaching even to financial panic. Our first thought should be to maintain unimpaired the activity of agriculture and industry That tax is theoretically best which interferes least with business.

Asks Just Taxation.

"Only about 3,500,000 people pay direct income taxes. The remainder pay, but pay indirectly, in the cost of all purchases, from a pair of shoes to a railroad ticket. This country has at least 107,000,000 of these indirect taxpayers. I am not disturbed about the effect on a few thousand people with large incomes because they have to pay high surtaxes. They can take care of themselves, whatever happens, as the rich always can. What concerns me is the indirect effect of high surtaxes on all the rest of the poeple. Let us always remember the poor. Whatever cry the demagogue may make about his ability to tax the rich, at the end of the year it will always be found that the people as a whole have paid the taxes. We should, therefore, have a system of taxation under which the people as a whole are most likely to be prosperous. Our country will be better off if, disregarding those who appeal to jealousy and envy, it follows in taxation and all else the straight path of justice.

For Economical Campaign.

"Economy should be practiced scrupulously in the conduct of a national campaign. I know it is difficult to distinguish between real service to the people and mere wastefulness. Costs have increased by doubling of the electorate, rendering close calculation impossible.

"Nevertheless, I can perceive no reason why the budget system should not be beneficial in a campaign, as it has proved to be in government. It is to be tested by our committee. derstandings with those nations. He recited the help given Mexico to avert domestic violence there, and the indication of a policy of making it worth while for a government to conduct itself so as to merit recognition. He pointed to the written agreement with Mexico to negotiate a treaty of amity and commerce such as has not been in existence since 1881.

Equal Opportunities for All.

Of discrimination of all kinds, President Coolidge said: "This is one country; we are one people united by common interests. There should be no favorites and no outcasts; no race or religious prejudices in the government. America opposes special privilege for anybody, and favors equal opportunity for everybody. It has adopted these conclusions because they are the logical conclusions of our ideals of freedom. Moreover, we believe they contribute to our material welfare. We oppose the artificial supports of privilege and monopoly because they are both unjust and uneconomic. They are not right. They do not work."

The Farm Situation.

Reviewing the situation of the farmer, the President said that one of the first thoughts in 1921 was for the relief and revival of agriculture as a fundamental industry, and touched upon the credits of between three and four hundred million dollars extended through the War Finance corporation, an additional $50,000,000 provided for the relief of the cattle industry, and the formation of a $10,000,000 corporation in the spring which, it was estimated, can furnish $100,000,000 for diversification and relief in the Northwest. He told of the activities of the intermediate credit banks, directly and indirectly assisting 500,000 farmers.

FAILURE TURNED INTO SUCCESS BY NECK TIE KING OF THE WORLD

(By Elmer M. Hill)

Failure has been turned into success by Eugene P. Beaumont of Buffalo, N. Y.

A little more than two years ago Beaumont was penniless, his little upstairs waist shop on a side street failed when women's styles, fickle as they are, changed and waists gave way to tunics, the one-piece frock and the costume ensemble.

Although badly in debt, Beaumont had courage and vision. With $200 borrowed capital he started into the mail order sale of men's neckwear from the kitchen of his little home. Without funds with which to buy envelopes, he and his wife made them from wrapping paper. He could not rent a second hand typewriter so the mail was addressed by hand.

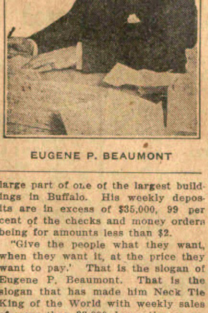
Today—a little more than two years later—Eugene P. Beaumont is head of the Tie-Art Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., with an annual business in excess of $1,500,000 and is the world's largest retail distributor of men's neckwear with the title of Neck Tie King. He is the largest parcel post shipper at the Buffalo postoffice with a monthly postage bill of more than $65,000.

Fourteen neckwear mills are working night and day shifts supplying the demands of Mr. Beaumont and in addition he takes almost the entire output of a garter factory, suspender mill, a handkerchief factory, two hosiery mills and a belt factory with sales running into the millions of articles annually.

Did you ever get four neckties by mail on approval?

The chances are that you have because Mr. Beaumont has sold neckwear to more than 1,500,000 men in the United States from Maine to California and from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico. Upwards of 200 typists and clerks are employed in the Beaumont plant.

From the kitchen of his home, Mr. Beaumont has been enlarging his plant from time to time in the last year so that today he occupies a large part of one of the largest buildings in Buffalo. His weekly deposits are in excess of $35,000, 99 per cent of the checks and money orders being for amounts less than $2.



EUGENE P. BEAUMONT

"Give the people what they want, when they want it, at the price they want to pay.' That is the slogan of Eugene P. Beaumont. That is the slogan that has made him Neck Tie King of the World with weekly sales of more than 33,000 dozen ties or approximately 400,000 individual ties. He sold more than 3,000,000 ties last year and his goal for this year is 10,000,000 ties.

This tremendous volume of business built up through night and day work by Mr. Beaumont in a little more than two years is not luck, he says. He points to the fact that what he has done can be duplicated by any individual who gives honest values. The Neck Tie King has found American men are honest, for his losses, although shipments run into millions, are less than two per cent.

"THEN HELP ME!"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place.

"I thought I heard an auto drive up to the institute last night."

Myers looked at her in the same manner. "The doctor came back last night unexpectedly," he said.

"But I thought Doctor Jenkins lived at Millville?"

"Not Jenkins, Miss Wentworth. Doctor Lancaster."

"Why," stammered the girl, "I must have misunderstood, then. I hope Doctor Lancaster is not ill. He was looking unwell when I saw him the day before yesterday."

"That's just what you might have told me when I asked you about him," said Myers triumphantly. "Well, Miss Wentworth, if you are going to ask me questions I suppose I can ask you questions."

"If I can answer them."

"Precisely," said the other. "I want to know if you can answer them. Now let's be frank. What do you know about all this?"

"I beg your pardon?" Joan inquired, declining his invitation to seat herself beside him.

"About all this," repeated Myers. "Come, now, you know what I mean as well as I do. How did Doctor Lancaster come to engage you?"

"If you have really a right to know, Mr. Myers," said Joan, "you had better ask Doctor Lancaster himself."

"O, all right," said Myers huffily. "Only the time will come when you'll wish you'd been frank with me. If we put all our cards on the table we can have a frank look into the situation."

"Really, Mr. Myers, I had no idea that I had come to a gambling house," said Joan, more nettled by the familiarity of his tone than by the words. "I have no cards at all, as you term it. I am simply an employee of Doctor Lancaster, and if that is not satisfactory to you I must refer you to him."

Myers grew red. His short, stocky figure with the wide shoulders looked abominably mean as he planted himself upon the porch and surveyed Joan with a furtive, sneering expression. He was not in any sense a gentleman, just a low class of bully, as Joan could plainly see from his gestures, even if his next words had not made this plain.

"So that's your attitude, is it?" he said, jerking out the words between his teeth. "All right, Miss Wentworth, you and I will play our hands separately. Don't come to me afterward, though, and say I didn't warn you. And if you don't like my ways and speech, and think I'm too ordinary for your taste—here comes the doctor! Go and make a complaint about me!"

Joan, turning from the man in disgust, saw Lancaster standing at the door. She went toward him, and then she looked at him in consternation. For Lancaster was undeniably ill. His face was a dead white, and he was leaning on a stick, as if to support himself.

"Doctor Lancaster—" Joan began.

He straightened himself with an effort, held out his hand and took her own. "I am very glad you came, Miss Wentworth," he said. "I hope you like the institute?"

Myers, who had come up and planted himself between them, flung out his challenge.

"She likes the institute all right, doctor," he said, with a short laugh, "but I reckon she don't like me. Bad taste, I call it. What do you say, doctor?"

There was an indescribable insolence in the man's tone. Joan looked for one of Lancaster's explosions of flaming wrath. But to her amazement none came. He seemed struggling to control himself. He flushed and looked from one to the other.

"Well, well, Myers," he said, hesitating, "I think things will turn out all right. Miss Wentworth and you won't conflict in any way. You mustn't quarrel, you know. I want all my employees to like each other," he ended weakly.

And he gave Joan the impression of pitiful impotence, as if he were somehow in the secretary's power and had surrendered his will to him—Lancaster, the tyrant of the Southern hospital, the smug bully of the operating theater! Joan saw a flash of triumph in Myers' eyes, and, with another laugh, the man left them and went into the building.

"I think breakfast is ready, Miss Wentworth," said Lancaster, after a moment, offering the girl his arm.

But Joan gave him hers instead, and they went together into the dining room.

She was glad to see that Myers was not to eat with them. Hungry as she was, she could not have taken breakfast in the man's presence; and even now she could hardly manage to eat, with Lancaster, so evidently ill, seated opposite her, swallowing gulps of hot coffee, and making pretense of eating thin strips of toast. His whole demeanor was that of a very ill man. And the transformation terrified her. All her preconceived ideas of him had vanished. She could make nothing of him. She felt a deep sense of relief when the meal ended.

Then Lancaster looked at her with the same furtive expression that she read in the face of everybody there.

"I thought I would run up and see how the institute was getting along, Miss Wentworth," he said.

They had risen from the table. Joan turned and faced him. "Doctor Lancaster," she said, "you spend a good deal of your time here. There was nothing unexpected about your visit last night. You knew that you would come here when you employed me."

"Why, Miss Wentworth—" Stammered the Doctor.

She must have spoken more angrily than she knew, for the web of deception was smothering her, and she felt that her position was becoming unendurable. For an instant a glimmer of amusement passed over the doctor's face.

"Why, Miss Wentworth, you are a regular spitfire," he said.

"It is true, then?"

"Well—yes, it is true. My work at Avonmouth is not too exacting for me to come here frequently."

"You knew you were coming, and you did not tell me. And you hinted at a patient requiring care. There is no patient, unless it is yourself. Doctor Lancaster, you engaged me for certain work here, and I am ready to fulfill it. It is not requisite that you should explain anything to me. But please give me the work you hired me to do, and do not try to deceive me."

Lancaster, who had been regarding her intently as she spoke, glanced hurriedly into the hall before replying. A look of fear had come into his eyes. Joan knew that it was Myers whom he feared. There was something dreadful in seeing this man cringe before the bully, this man who had, in turn, made others cringe before him.

"Miss Wentworth," said Lancaster in a low tone, "believe me, I have no intention of deceiving you. On the contrary, it is my wish to confide in you. Will you come out on the porch and permit me to smoke?"

She bowed, and they went out together. They took their seats upon two chairs at the end of the verandah, Joan purposely seating herself between her companion and the door. She knew why he kept glancing toward it.

"Miss Wentworth," Lancaster began, "we spoke of loyalty the other night. If you saw a human being in trouble of his own making, would it be your impulse to help him, or to leave him to fight his battle alone?"

"I should help him if I could," said Joan.

"Then help me," said Lancaster. "It was myself of whom I spoke to you. Will you help me with loyalty and sympathy, and refuse to be discouraged?"

The girl softened toward him; he was obviously sincere, and obviously distressed. "Gladly, Doctor Lancaster," she answered.

"I thought that I could trust you when I saw your face, and I was sure of it when you talked of your vocation. And I cannot trust anyone else. I have no opportunity—" he broke off irresolutely and then went on, "I have had no opportunity of taking up that matter with the board yet," he continued.

Joan knew that he was not speaking frankly now; but his next words were in the same tone of sincerity.

"Miss Wentworth, that matter and this is all bound up together. You must help me before I can help you, as I said to you when you came into the consulting room. I cannot explain any more now. I want help in the biggest fight of my life, and, if I fail, I want a witness that I have fought. I saw you and thought you would give me your help. For God's sake don't refuse me!"

In spite of his sincerity the idea flashed through Joan's mind that his troubles might be the fancies of a sick man.

"If I discharge you before the month is over, don't go. Refuse to go. Nobody can make you go. I am at the head of the institute. Ignore me. Stay!"

"I'll stay," said Joan, and then, looking at his white face and trembling hands, she thought she knew what was the matter with him.

"Listen, Doctor Lancaster," she began, laying her fingers on his arm. But then she saw that he was not looking at her. He was looking past her toward Myers, who was coming across the pasture toward the entrance. His expression was transformed.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, with a sudden change of tone, "what was I saying to you? I am not myself at all today. I have been greatly overworked, and talking nonsense. Don't remember it. I meant nothing at all. Of course you must remain your month, in case any patients come, and then we'll see what we can do about the position."

And, as Myers came up to them, the same hopeless, cringing expression came into his eyes.

The secretary ignored Joan completely. "Well, doctor," he said, "I have the quarterly statement ready for you. Won't you come and look over it? I must have your signature, and you know how hard it is to fasten you down."

"Yes, I'll come, certainly, Myers," said Lancaster, rising.

The two men went into the house together. Joan heard the door close behind them. She was left to ponder over that interview.

She was conscious of two conflicting impulses: to leave, and to remain for Lancaster's sake. There was something about the man's pitiable condition that aroused all her sympathies. But there was something about the whole place repulsive in the extreme.

She must get allies in this blind fight against the secretary if she remained. Whom? Mrs. Fraser? That was impossible as yet.

At that moment she saw Doctor Jenkins driving up the path, and went to meet him.

The boy sprang to the ground and raised his hat. "Good morning, Miss Wentworth. How is the doctor today?" he asked.

"Doctor Lancaster looks very ill," she answered. "And Doctor Jenkins, I want to ask you—"

"Pardon me, Miss Wentworth. Can I see him?"

"He is with Mr. Myers."

Jenkins' face assumed an aspect of profound discouragement. "Then I'll come back this afternoon," he said, preparing to enter the buggy again.

But he found Joan intercepting his passage. She had noted the look on his face, and she felt that he understood much which could be explained.

"Doctor Jenkins," she said quietly, "Doctor Lancaster is unwell and I am his nurse. Will you not tell me what is the matter with him?"

"Why, Miss Wentworth—" stammered the doctor.

So Doctor Lancaster himself is the sick man! And Joan says she'll help him. What ails the doctor?

Growths of Mangroves Serve Good Purpose

The trees known as "mangroves" form dense thickets along the seacoast in the tropics of the old world as well as of the new. They are characterized by the production of many prop roots from the trunks and branches; these prop roots reach into the mud and form practically impenetrable tangles. They thus serve to hold the mud together and are said to act as natural sea walls, protecting the soil against the inroads of the sea. The bark of the tree is sometimes taken for its abundance of tanning material; otherwise the several species are of no economic importance.

In many of these species the roots branch repeatedly before reaching the mud, instead of growing straight down. The root divides into two branches, one of which soon dies away, while the other continues the growth. After extending for some distance this also divides into two, one of the branches persisting, and so on.

The Dutch botanist Van Leeuwen had an opportunity to study a mangrove tangle near Samarang, in Java, and he discovered the cause of the peculiar habit of root branching to be a small beetle. The female beetle lays her eggs near the tip of the root. The injury causes a new root to sprout out just above the tip and the old tip continues to grow

Claims That Humanity Gains in Good Looks

One of the results of modern civilization is that men are growing more handsome. No lesser authority than the conservator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, in London, is responsible for this graceful compliment. He is supported in his assertion by the man who compiled photographic records of the nation's most famous men for the national photographic gallery. It appears that modern man does not use his jaws so much as his forebears and that the change in the bony framework of the face is making it narrower and more refined. The virile beauty of the square jaw has been the subject of song and story. More recently the movie sheik has been accepted as the high point of masculine perfectability in looks. Both displaced Jupiter, Ammon and Apollo. "Handsomest-man" votes have never proved quite satisfactory. How, then, are we to tell whether or not men are becoming more handsome?

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

HEADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

We want to call attention to the sermon of Rev. Hutton last Sunday evening. We wish a thousand people could have heard it. Death of Edd Carter

Edd E. Carter of Moscow township passed way at his home on the old Sarah Ann Wilcox farm north west of this village, on Wednesday evening about five o'clock from heart trouble. He had recently removed to the present home and being exhausted lay down to sleep. Later he was found dead by neighbors. He was 79 years, 6 months and 28 days of age, and had resided in Moscow township for forty years or more. Deceased was born in Royalton, New York August 6th, 1845 and came with his parents to Michigan at an early date. He is survived by the wife, one sister Mrs. Orson Crapser of Moscow township, one brother William Carter of Fort worth. Funeral services will be held Saturday March 7th at 2:00 p. m. at the Moscow Plains church and burial in the Plains cemetery.

Why We Have The Baby Clinic

The Baby Clinic to be held in North Adams on Monday, March 9th, from 9:00 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. comes because a Federal Act in operation July 1, 1922, gave each state a sum of money equal to the sum the state would appropriate to aid in promoting infant and maternal welfare. Michigan voted $30,000 making a total of $60,000 for our state. This federal act was known by the name of the men who sponsored it "Sheppard Towner" and was deemed necessary because the United States ranks too high in death of mothers and children compared with other civilized nations. Two and one half years of work have elapsed and a very satisfactory report of accomplishments is submitted by the State Health Department. The Educational Program has been carried on in three ways: Through the public press, through the instruction of groups of girls and mothers' classes, and through letters sent the individual mother.

Eighty-three counties have been surveyed by State Workers and a greater general interest has been developed. On the basis of the average of births and deaths during 1921-22-23-24 we shall have a saving of more than 600 babies for this year under one year of age, and the lowest death rate in the history of the State Records. Part of this is unquestionably due to infancy and maternity work. Total attendance at Health Talks numbers 49,957, babies examined 41,137: clinics held 638; individual letters sent out 47,196; all three figures show a remarkable interest in the work We are fortunate in having such a clinic in our town and a good attendance is expected at the Congregational church parlors next Monday.

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

The organization, which owns a building site here, has decided to erect a church from stones to be gathered from fields in this vicinity Members of the society will haul the rock to the building site.

Lansing—Reports given at the annual meeting of the Michigan Livestock Co-operative Shipping Association here showed that $13,000,000 worth of livestock has been handled through the Detroit and Buffalo offices, and in addition to obtaining lower rates, the association has returned $20,366 in dividends to shippers.

Mt. Clemens—With no effort on his part being made to furnish the $10,000 bail bond demanded by Justice Dusse, Andrew Quigley is still in jail and his hearing again has been adjourned. Quigley is one of the defendants named in the warrants issued as a result of Judge Leland Carr's one man grand jury last autumn.

Detroit—In a short range pistol duel, Patrolman Edward Perrin shot to death an unidentified gunman and frustrated the robbery of the drug store at 2439 Woodward avenue, corner of Duffield street. Unaware that he was stepping into holdup or gun battle, the policeman entered the store to purchase a package of chewing gum.

Flint—Mrs. W. Earl Ross, wife of the assistant treasurer of the A. C. Spark Plug Co., of this city, was found burned to death in the kitchen of her home by the husband when he came home for lunch. Cady of Port Huron who has held that position for seven years. The vote was 568 to 507. The chairmanship was the last business before the convetion to be decided. Then the resolutions of the convention were approved, and nominations were made for th evarious state offices that are to be filled at the April 6 election.

Marshall—The wish of a dead woman that part her money, $5,000, be used to build a club house for the "Women of Marshall," may not be fulfilled for years. The Monday club, which was bequeathed the money, has no other funds. The woman, Miss Elizabeth K. Hughes, asked that somewhere in the contemplated building a memorial plate to her memory be placed. She also left a bequest of several thousand dollars to the public library without specifying the purpose for which it is to be used.

Lansing—Poor support given the social service bureau here led to the resignation of Miss Grace Cone, secretary of the bureau for the last five years and a member of the staff seven years. Miss Cone plans to go to Tulsa, Okla. Miss Margaret Campbell, head of the local chapter of the American Red Cross, also announced her resignation. Failure of a drive here last fall to raise money for the Community Welfare fund in sufficient amount for the needs of the city's organizations have greatly handicapped the social service bureau.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Indiana Democratic Solons Leave State to Prevent Alleged Gerrymander.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DEMOCRATS of the Indiana senate, taking a leaf from the book of the Rhode Island Republican senators of last year, ran away from their capital and their state last week to save their party from what they feared would be a dangerous gerrymander. Eighteen of them bolted, and fifteen took refuge in Ohio where, it was asserted, they were safe from arrest. Thus the quorum was broken and no legislation was possible.

It all started with a plan of the Republicans to pass a bill taking Lawrence county from the Third congressional district, which is normally Democratic, and adding it to the Second district, which is doubtful. As Lawrence county is strongly Republican this scheme would decrease the chances of the Democrats for electing a congressman from the Second district. So, calling themselves "God's own minority," they absented themselves from the senate session. When the chief doorkeeper was sent to arrest them they locked themselves in a hotel room, and later, hearing that the militia was to be used in coercing them, they sought sanctuary outside the state. Only three Democratic senators remained in Indianapolis—one as a lookout and two who were ill. Warrants were issued for the arrest of 16 of them, but the Ohio authorities said they saw no way in which they could aid the Indiana Republicans. Nothing like this has happened in Indiana since 1869 when the Democratic minority in the legislature resigned so that the fifteenth amendment to the federal Constitution could not be taken up for ratification.

Later in the week some sort of compromise was arranged and the bolting senators started back to Indianapolis.

ABOUT one hundred women, representing a million members of national women's organizations, spent several days in Washington in a conference on ways of keeping the peace of the world. They are not pacifists, not advocates of immediate disarmament, but patriots who believe the dangers of war may be lessened. The government, led by President Coolidge himself, took a lively interest in the meeting and he and other high officials gave the women brief but snappy lectures on national defense as a peace insurance. The President talked to them on rational reduction of armament, saying:

"About in proportion as the nations shall make progress in creating effective tribunals for the peaceful settlement of international differences they will find themselves able to lessen their military establishments. For the present the most we can hope is to secure general acceptance, in good faith and without reservation, of the view that whatever armaments we create, whatever preparations we make, shall be limited by the reasonable requirements of security. I do not think we should set a good example by abolishing our army and navy."

Then Secretary of War Weeks discussed impractical idealism and practical preparedness, and Gen. John L. Hines, chief of staff, gave an illuminating talk on the national defense act and what is needed for self protection. Preparedness, industrial and military, were discussed by Assistant Secretary of War Davis and Maj. Gen. Hanson E. Ely, commandant of the army war college. Gen. Ely Helmick gave a lesson on "The Undermining of the Youth of the Nation" and told the women: "Radical societies that teach socialism, communism and syndicalism, and that advocate violent changes in our governmental system, exist in George Washington university, the University of Chicago, Northwestern university, Wellesley college, Bryn Mawr and Vassar."

Rear Admiral W. W. Phelps furnished the sensation of the second day's session with a series of startling statements concerning oil, trade and Great Britain. Said he:

"The American open door principle has been invoked to help American citizens secure oil concessions. Wherever we turn, this principle has been so successfully combated by the imperialistic powers and fought by our own provincial politicians for temporary partisan ends, that American rights and interests have been pretty generally defeated.

"The result is that the bulk of the world's oil supply is in English control, and within another generation, when our own oil pools are drained, as they are being drained not only by us but also by England and Japan to conserve their own oil reserves, your navy and merchant marine will be at England's mercy for their fuel. You will be glad to be allowed to buy your gasoline at a dollar a gallon.

"One of the primary objectives of the League of Nations, under the leadership of England, is to devise some policy to destroy the American favorable balance of trade.

"Serious differences are brewing with England over shipping policies. These differences can be prevented from developing into a conflict only by a strong navy. That America determines to build up a great merchant marine fleet has created against us the bitter animosity of the English shipping interests."

Secretaries Hughes, Weeks and Wilbur declined to back up the rear admiral's alarmist views.

TWO more United States senators have been charged with improper use of influence before federal government agencies and both, denying the accusations, have asked for full investigation. They are Spencer of Missouri and Bursum of New Mexico. The charge against Senator Spencer is made by Henry Wood Elliott and has to do with the renewal of a contract under which the Fouke Fur company of St. Louis dresses and dyes the government furs from seals slaughtered at the Pribilof islands. Justice officials did not disclose the exact nature of the charges which have been made against Senator Bursum by Carl Magee, a New Mexico newspaper man, who was a witness in the Teapot Dome investigation. Assistant Attorney General Donovan said that his investigation thus far had developed nothing of importance but that he intended "to see the matter through."

DEATH and disease made serious inroads in the ranks of the prominent men of the world. Last Wednesday morning Medill McCormick, the retiring United States senator from Illinois, was found dead in bed in his Washington hotel apartment, the cause of his demise being myocarditis. Well educated, widely traveled, wealthy and in many ways brilliant, Mr. McCormick had been for years an outstanding figure in American political life. For a time he was editor and publisher of the Chicago Tribune, and afterward served in the Illinois legislature, as congressman-at-large from that state, and then as senator. As a Progressive he gave active support to Theodore Roosevelt, and in the senate he was a leader of the "irreconcilables" who defeated the ratification of the Versailles treaty. Mr. McCormick was defeated for renomination last fall by Charles Deneen. He had been mentioned as a possible choice for several diplomatic posts, and it was certain that his connection with public affairs was not to be ended by his enforced retirement from the senate.

Europe lost by death Hjalmar Branting, long the leader of the Social Democrats of Sweden and three times premier of that country. Other well-known Europeans who passed away were Sir Thomas C. Allbutt, famous English physician; Admiral von Usedom of Germany, who defended the Dardanelles against the allies, and Joseph Rowntree, one of the greatest chocolate manufacturers of the world and a leader of English Quakers.

King George of Great Britain is so ill that his physicians have ordered him to the Mediterranean, and as the prince of Wales is about to start for South America, the duke of York is in Africa and Prince Henry is not well, it is taken for granted that a privy council will be appointed to exercise the functions of the crown.

President Ebert of Germany also is very sick—so sick that at this writing his recovery is scarcely expected. He was operated on for appendicitis and peritonitis ensued. Premier Mussolini of Italy has had a severe attack of influenza but is reported to be on the way to recovery.

DISSENSION threatens to wreck the plans for the Confederate memorial on Stone mountain near Atlanta, Ga., already partly carried out. Gutzon Borglum, sculptor of the memorial, heads one faction and Hollins Randolph, an Atlanta lawyer, the other. Last week Borglum was discharged by the memorial association, and he retaliated by destroying the models and working plans. The association claims these were its property and says the sculptor and J. G. Tucker, superintendent of operations at the mountain, will be prosecuted for destroying them and also sued for $50,000 damages. Borglum says he was dismissed because he is a Northern man.

ENGLAND'S foreign office is said to have proposed to Premier Herriot the formation of a quadruple entente consisting of Great Britain, France, Belgium and Germany. This, it is intended, shall make France secure along the Rhine and also keep Germany from alliance with Japan and Russia; but it would mean, too, the virtual abandonment of Poland by France, and it is not likely the French will consent to this.

REBELLION in Kurdistan appears to have been successful for the time being, and dispatches from Constantinople say the Kurds have Prince Selim as their king. He is a son of former Sultan Abdul Hamid and cousin of former Sultan Mohammed V, and was considered as the latter's successor when he abdicated in 1922.

Another revolt, nearer home and of more importance to America, took place in Panama, where a lot of San Blas Indians, armed with rifles and shotguns rose against the government authorities, killed a number of Panamans and burned the government quarters in the territorial capital at Porvenir. It was said at Colon that R. O. Marsh, the American explorer who claims to have discovered "white Indians," is in the country again and is urging the Indians to resist the government.

KANSAS CITY has joined the long list of cities that have adopted the manager plan, and is the third largest American municipality with this form of government. The plan, as adopted in Kansas City, has several improvements over the system in other cities. The mayor is to be elected by the people rather than chosen by the council from its membership. Further, councilmen are to be chosen, four from as many districts and four by the city at large, rather than by districts alone, as in Cleveland and other cities. The Kansas City plan permits the mayor to demand reconsideration of ordinances, to appoint the heads of one city department, parks, and to exercise other appointive powers.

MANUEL C. TELLEZ, the new ambassador from Mexico, was received last week by President Coolidge, and Ambassador Sheffield is back from Mexico City, and now negotiations are in progress in Washington on several proposed agreements with Mexico. The first of these is a new treaty of amity and commerce, which will include many of the features of the trade treaty with Germany, recently approved by the senate. Other contemplated pacts are treaties for the suppression of illicit drug traffic and other smuggling and for the protection of migratory birds; and a convention to replace the temporary postal agreement reached at San Antonio last December to devise ways and means to prevent wholesale swindling operations which are reported to have been going on by mail.

SIMON GUGGENHEIM, mining magnate and one-time senator from Colorado, announces a preliminary gift of $3,000,000 to endow the John Simon Guggenheim foundation fellowships for study abroad, as a memorial to his son who died in 1922. The scholarships are open to men and women, married and single, of any race, creed or color, and there are no restrictions on the subjects to be studied. The first ones will be awarded for the academic year 1926-27. A board of trustees and an advisory committee have been named.

Yale Decides to Favor Sons of Its Graduates

New Haven.—By taking the stand that sons and grandsons of its alumni are to be allowed to enter the university ahead of other applicants, Yale has introduced a new policy intended to prevent overcrowding, from which many colleges now suffer.

The rule just passed indicates that the 850 selected for entrance under the present limit will include the sons or grandsons of the graduates of the university, although others may have passed the tests with higher marks.

In announcing the adoption of this rule, President Angell stated that a committee had been at work studying the scholarship marks of Yale students who are descendants of Yale alumni, and that the committee report shows that the Yale men's sons have an average mark of two-tenths of 1 per cent higher than those who are not.

Recently the Yale Weekly Alumni stated that figures showed that the university could be largely recruited from the descendants of the graduates if this was desired.

A move to select members of the freshman class largely through personal interviews is at present under discussion.

These proposals have made it clear that Yale officials will lay down definite rules which will decide the future university membership as effectively as the immigration policy of the United States will fix the character of the future population.

We want you to make this test

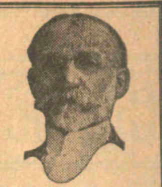
WE want every weak, puny, fagged-out man and woman in America to make this test: buy one bottle of Tanlac at your druggist's, take it according to directions for one week and see how quickly you get started back to full strength and vigor.

We know what we are talking about. Tanlac has helped millions. In our files are more than 100,000 letters of praise from grateful users.

Don't confuse Tanlac with ordinary patent nostrums. It is Nature's own tonic and builder, compounded from roots, barks and herbs that we gather at great expense from the four corners of the earth.

Tanlac goes straight to the seat of your trouble; cleanses and purifies the blood stream; puts your digestion in proper shape. First thing you know you have an appetite like a starved child. You rest at night and your whole body begins to feel the stir of strength and energy.

Don't you be discouraged. Don't put off testing Tanlac another day. Get a bottle now and in a week you should notice signs of real improvement.



Brought Health and Happiness

"Since the Civil War indigestion and stomach trouble have been the bane of my existence. Tanlac made my weak stomach sound and did away with all signs of indigestion. In fact it has brought me health, strength and happiness and I give it unqualified endorsement and praise."

"No," the first answered; "he said you were."

Cost of Revolution

Final accounts submitted to the Hungarian national assembly show that Count Michael Karolyi's revolution and governorship and the subsequent bolshevist regime cost Hungary no less than 8,525,000,000 crowns in the currency of 1919, or over $500,000,000.

Earthquake Saturday Evening

Michigan was drafted into the zone of destructive subterranean disturbances, say the seismographs in different cities. In Detroit it was actually feared the quake of Satnrday night might have seriously damaged a few old-time buildings right around the heart of the city, but close inspection fails to disclose anything ruptured, or any water or gas mains disturbed sufficient to damage them. At a town near Quebec in Canada, a large stone church was wrecked by the tremors which lasted over one minute. As luck would have it, the worshipers had all left the church but a short time before, so no one was injured. In New York city on Manhattan Island the immense sky scrapers trembled and rocked perceptibly, but there is no report of any serious damage.

Scientists claim the whole Atlantic coast is due sooner or later for a severe earthquake, and are warning the inhabitants to be prepared.

In such a case the outlook would not be cheerful for Gotham dwellers, especially those on the 25th floors of high buildings. Steel framework construction was supposed to be earthquake proof up to the time of the SanFrancisco calamity, but at that time large numbers of steel structures were shaken to pieces like a child's block-house.

County Man Exhibits in National Show

C. B. Willets of Reading is one of the prominent Hillsdale County exhibitors in the National Seed Corn Show to be held in Chicago March 2 to 7, according to advices from the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural foundation which is sponsoring the show and offering $17,000 in prizes. Mr. Willits is out after the Kittle trophy of $1,000 offered for the best ear of seed corn in America. The National Seed Corn Show is bringing home to corn growers the necessity for careful selection and testing of ears this spring in order to insure a normal crop for 1925. E. B. Heaton, general manager of the show, estimates that if farmers will pick out their seed corn and test it for germination before planting it will mean a total increase of one billion bushels next harvest time.

The National Seed Corn Show is unique. Any corn grower may share in the prizes, but no one may enter more than a single ear. In addition to showing the best specimens of leading growers, the Chicago show will also display representative ears from thousands of corncribs. No ear will be awarded a prize until tested for germination power and resistance, the judges to be selected by the American Society of Agromony. Entries should be mailed to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, Chicago, not later than March 1.

Jackson County Court House

Jackson county seems to be obsessed with the idea that a new Court House should be erected since the fire, but the county solons say "No" with a loud voice and they mean it. It is claimed several thousand people throughout the county have expressed themselves in favor of junking the old building on West Main street and removing to a location more centralized whereon to erect a combined city hall and court house which would astonish the natives of even staid old Jackson. The yellow crowd are trying hard to put the question to a plebiscite, but so far the Supervisors have overruled the motion.

There is one sure thing—Jackson county is financially "hard up" or else she is composed of New England thrift, since the old rookery known as the Court House, has for years been looked upon with astonishment by visitors to the city, and we hate to say it—real ridicule has been more or less saddled upon the shoulders of innocent taxpayers because of it.

Looking at the matter from the standpoint of a disinterested party one would say that it seems unbelievable so rich and opulant a county and a city so large and prosperous as Jackson, should both he without a public building suited to municipal needs. Well, as Postum Cereal says "there is a reason" and some of the funds which should have gone into commodious county and city buildings, have probably been side-tracked and consumed by the beautiful (?) concrete structure known as the Grand Stand. My! My! What a state of affairs! Just think of it: Here is a county fair conducted in the most prosperous inland city in southern Michigan, and has been given liberal bran mashes in the shape of donations of county and city money for several years, yet has not grown a set of legs sufficient to uphold its own body. A dozen Burris' Lourims and Cobbs amalgamated into one individual would find hard sledding to bring Jackson county out of the errors into which it has fallen by reason of catering to the gaudy dictates of the gambler and fly-by night speculator. However, there is still some life in the animated corpse of city management—and where life is, there is hope.

Boost Better Seed With Special Week

The importance of a safe seed supply for Michigan farmers, and the effect of such seed on the prosperity of agriculture in general, will be brought home to the state during the week of March 16 to 20 designated as official "Better Seed" week for Michigan.

During this week practically every farm interest in the state will join the campaign to bring out the importance of an adapted, guaranteed seed supply. Meetings will be held at local points over the state, an effort being made to reach a large percentage of the farmers of the state with informational material on seeds.

An outstanding feature of the Better Seed week will be a series of radio lectures to be given over station WKAR, the M. A. C. station. These lectures, which will be part of the regular extension radio school from the college station, will be given between 7:15 and 8:00 o'clock, eastern time, each evening of the week. Local groups throughout the state will organize radio parties where there are receiving sets, taking in the Better Seed talks in this way.

"Michigan farmers will be sowing ten million dollars worth of seed within the next few days," says C. R. Megee, acting head of the farm crops department at M. A. C. "A two hundred and thirty million dollar crop will depend on the quality of this seed. The Better Seed week will aim to help in the efficient expenditure of this big agricultural investment."

Seek Electric Power For Michigan Farms

More complete electric light and power service for Michigan farms will be discussed in a special conference at the Michigan Agricultural College on March 20, according to G. W. Bissell, dean of the college engineering division, who is calling the meeting.

A national committee on the relation of electricity to the farm has already instituted systematic study of farm power questions in a number of other states. The American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, The American Society of Agricultural Engineers, the U. S. departments of Agriculture, Commerce, and Interior, and the National Electric Light Association are all represented on the national committee. The chief speaker at the March 20 conference will be Dr. E. A. White, chairman of the national committee.

"The problem of electric service in rural living is extremely important," says Dean Bissel, "and we hope at this conference to work out a constructive program for the state." Everyone interested in the farm light and power question is invited to attend the conference, Dean G. W, Bissell being prepared to furnish more complete information to those who may be interested.

Rumor says that the state of Michigan is preparing to build concrete into the pike beginning at the state line of Indiana and connecting the various concrete links clear across Michigan. The other day a big concrete mixer went through here on the railroad designed for state use on the Pike in the vicinity of Clinton where operations began last fall to pave the highway. At the end of this summer it is expected the old territorial road from end to end as far as Michigan is concerned, will be paved for auto travel. Then Hurrah Boys! Won't it be great sport to warm up the old gas buggy some fine morning in June and start for Chicago or most any other place we wish at our own convenience. We are hedged in by no time tables, no schedules appeal to us, no conductors or Captains yell "All Aboard" in our sensitive ears. When we get right down to the bosom of old Nature and we decide we want to picnic along the road we stop when we please, we pick flowers where and when we choose and tell the world to go Hang! Speed the day, Governor Groesbeck.

Henry Ford's subdivision of Detroit known commonly as Dearborn, is certainly a mighty good place to invest money according to our deductions. In all 75 new homes and a splendid "Watsonian" theatre are now building in that suburb. What Detroit will be in twenty five years from now staggers description—and old Chicago must look to her laurels since it only needs the St Lawrence to Ocean Waterway to make Detroit the greatest inland city in the United States. The latest news state that the D and C Navigation Company of Detroit contemplates putting on a regular schedule steamer line between Chicago and Detroit via the Straits of Macinac, and will put in service the two magnificent steamers "Western States" and "Eastern States" two of the largest and most palatial fresh water boats in the world. Fares will be reasonably priced and no doubt a larger number of people will take advantage of this opportunity to visit Chicago and at the same shot enjoy an unparalleled trip by water.

Among the new agricultural bulletins just off the press at M. A. C. are two which are attracting particular attention among farmers of the state. One on "Profitable Pruning of the Concord Grape", written by N. L. Partridge, of the college horticultural department, is of interest to the grape growers of the state, while potato men are calling for "Marketing Michigan Potatoes a comprehensive bulletin edited by J. $2,000,000 A Year Spent On Rat Poisons And Traps Figures recently collected by the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture indicate that a little more than $2,000,000 is expended annually in the United States on products sold for rat control. Although this is a comparatively small item compared with others in the list of losses chargeable to rats, it is one that can be measured with a reasonable degree of accuracy.

Letters were written to all concerns in the United States which were listed as being engaged in the manufacture of preparations or devices to combat rats. Reliable figures were received from 22 manufactures of chemical poisons, from nine manufacturers of bacterial viruses, and from four trap manufactures. A compilation of the figures received showed that approximately $1,380,000 is expended annually for chemical poisons to combat rats The amount spent for bacterial rats viruses is about $500,000, The records of money spent for bacterial rat viruses is about $500,000. The records of money spent annually for rat traps were incomplete, but indicated an expenditure in excess of $233,000, which brings the total to about $2,000,000.

Thousands To Attend M. A. C. Radio School

That thousands of Michigan farm people, in addition to other thousands from states scattered all over the country, will "attend" the special radio extension courses which started at M. A. C. on March 2 was indicated by enrollment this week for the first of the courses.

The idea of sitting at home in comfort and "taking in" educational programs along the technical lines of their business seems to appeal to the state's rural population An actual count of those who listen to the lectures is an impossibility, according to college authorities in charge of the radio school, only a relatively small percentage actually registering. It is certain, however, that the number will run well into the thousands for each of the courses to be given.

The five agricultural extension courses, registration in which is open to anybody in the state, are listed as follows: March 2 13; farm machinery and home conveniences March 16 27; farm crops and soils; March 30 April 10. Poultry and Livestock; April 13 24, home gardens; and April 27 May 8, homemakers' course.

Save on Your Gas and See the Scenery!

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President American Bankers Association.

A long, long time ago, a very great teacher said, "Man shall not live by bread alone." That is true. A man who lives by bread alone and simply feeds his body will be nothing more than an animal. There is more than bread that goes to the making of a life. There are the things of the mind and the spirit, and we are all of us making a great mistake if we measure success in this world by material things. Material things are all right and ought to be emphasized to some extent, but they should not occupy more than their proper place in the scheme of things. Over and above and beyond them are the things of the intellect, and over and above those are the things of the spirit, the finer things of life. If, in reaching out for material prosperity, we forget those things, we may get the material prosperity, but we will not get true joy and true happiness out of life. I want to commend to every one that, in addition to striving for the good things of this life which are good in their way, to remember the other things also.

William E. Knox

I promise you if you do that, it will not make any difference whether you get great rewards or not; it will not make any difference whether you arrive at high position or not. You will have instead a great inward satisfaction, and you will feel that you have lived a pretty good life and had a good time while you were doing it.

Have your good time as you go along. Don't be like the automobilists that go whizzing over the country at sixty miles an hour and arrive at their destinations at the end of the day's run not having seen the beauties of the country they went through; having seen nothing of the birds or the flowers, of the streams and the trees and the hills, but having just totaled up so many miles on such an expenditure of gas. Save on your gas and enjoy the scenery as you go along through life. Just put that into operation—save on your gas and see more of the scenery!

WHY FARMING DECLINED

A review of the present status of agriculture in New England has shown that the more important contributing causes of the condition which exists are: Waste of farm resources; failure to understand and practice the fundamental principles of business; lack of an adequate program of farm management and soil management, with the attendant depletion of soil fertility; choice of unsuitable and oftentimes unmarketable varieties; the use of poor seed; the keeping and breeding of inferior animals; the use of purchased feeds instead of home grown grain; quantity instead of quality production; and failure to grade produce properly and according to law. The decline of New England agriculture presents a serious problem which deserves the most careful study.—Banker-Farmer.

Banks of Lee County, Mississippi, have a budget of $5,000 which they use in keeping an expert going about the county urging more dairying and better dairying, an advisor on all dairy operations. Two hundred cars of heifers and cows were shipped out of the county last year.

The Truant Soul

By Victor Rousseau

It will engage your attention in a manner different from that of the average novel. Its characters are unusual and remarkable. It begins in the operating room of a large hospital and shows a famous surgeon plying the scalpel in a clinic before an assemblage of doctors, nurses and internes. From such an atmosphere it journeys quickly to a placid retreat in the mountains of a southern state and introduces hill folks and other new characters. It is amazing in its incidents, its mystery and its actors.

Fifth Anniversary of the 18th Amendment

It is hoped that every local union will observe this anniversary. If it cannot be done on January 16, be sure and hold it some other date. It is good educational work and the program should help to answer the howls of those who want the liquor traffic back. Don't miss the opportunity to educate the people in your community.

Following program is suggested by the National W. C. T. U.:

Singing, "America." Salute to the Flag, led by a Loyal Temperance Legioner, or some young person. "American's Creed," in Concert by Everybody. Short Address, "The W. C. T. U. and the Eighteenth Amendment." Reading. "Proclamation for National Constitutional Prohibition," written by Mrs Lillian M. N. Stevens, and read by a Junior member if possible. Singing, "Allegiance." Address, "What the National Prohibition Law mean to the United States,—To the Children, To its Economic Life, To its Social Welfare. Singing "America, the Beautiful." Address "Life of Our Republic is Dependent Upon Law Observance." Exercise, "Eminent Americans on Law Enforcement." Address, "International Value of Prohibition." Singing, "Work for Enforcement." Address, "Co-operation—the Secret of Success." Address, "Holding Our Legislative Lines." Offering for Lillian Stevens Legislative Fund. Singing, "Onward, Christian Soldier."

LAW ENFORCEMENT

With police, sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, prosecuting officers, and judges, some of the public imagine that they have discharged their full duty as citizens and contributed their full share toward upholding and enforcing the law when they have voted for the election of these officers, or for those who are responsible for their selections, and then paid their taxes. This is a grave error, and easy to fall into and if the public generally would take this view, few, if any laws could be enforced. We officers are but servants and agents of the people, and as such, in order to do the thing you employ us to do, we must have the unselfish and constant support of our masters, the people. Without this we are not able to accomplish very much.

Michigan's Road Program

Fifteen million dollars worth of good roads have been completed in Michigan under the Federal aid plan since its inauguration in 1916. Seven million dollars was the government's share of the cost of construction of these highways. Of the 570 miles that have been built in the state under this plan, 151 miles were completed up to the end of the last fiscal year at a cost of $4,327,152 of which the Federal government contributed about half. Practically all this money went into the construction of concrete highways.

Investigations of road conditions before and after improvement has shown that good roads reduced hauling expenses 50 percent, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The expense of hauling crops from farm to shipping points is one of the most expensive steps in the marketing system. Under average conditions expense of hauling milk is 4.5 percent of its value and of potatoes 15 percent and hogs 2 percent of their value.

Good roads are making hauling possible the year around in Michigan regardless of weather conditions and reduces marketing expenses through larger loads carried at greater speed. For every urban family in the state 3,936 pounds of dairy products, vegetables, fruit, grain and meat products are hauled over country roads. Good roads will help materially to bring down the cost of living under present conditions. Ten cents out of every dollar's worth of farm products hauled over the roads in this state goes to meet the expenses of local and long distant transportation service. The average haul from farm to shipping point is 8 miles and 9 hours hours is consumed to a load averaging 2500 pounds.

There are 45 automobiles for each 100 farms in the state.

Father Slane Dies in New York

Right Reverend Father Slane, formerly of St. Anthony's Catholic church in Hillsdale, was recently found dead in a hotel at Coney Island, New York. What he was doing and how he came there tradition doth not tell. Of course the nomadic lonely life led by a priest makes it difficult at times to locate them. The Father had been at Owosso since leaving this county, and left six weeks ago to go home to old Erin and visit his relatives. Investigation of his affairs shows him to be immensely wealthy. It is claimed by the Catholics that his salary never exceeded $750.00 per annum, yet he died possessed of a quarter of a million dollars. He made investments in Brooklyn (New York) real estate which turned out real lucky. How fortuuate he had been will probably never be known. Besides receiving the confessional and conducting mass the good Father found time to invest his earthly substance where rust and mildew corrupteth not and thieves do not break in and steal.

Sculptor Borglum Hits a Snag

What probably is the largest job of sculpture ever let in this country is the contract awarded to Gutzom Borglum, famous chiseler, for hewing out of solid rock on the face of Stone Mountain near Atlanta, Georgia, a replica of Gen. Robert E. Lee, famous Confederate leader and his staff on horseback. The gigantic proportions of this work can scarcely be imagined but the Association at Atlanta which made the contract for several million dollars, has been enjoined by Borglum for squandering the funds, hence the trouble. In retaliation they cancelled the contract. No sooner had this been done than the irate sculptor destroyed his working models, and there is a chance for a long litigation. Borglum is a bit ugly and swears vengeance.

The methods of Borglum indicate a wonderful ability to plan details. In order to get a few outlines on the side of the mountain Borglum had constructed a gigantic magic lantern which would project a picture several hundred feet. Having prepared drawings of the piece, he put them into the reflector and succeeded in getting a fairly good outline to work from.

The carving began over a year ago and at present some of the figures are partially completed, but it would be a hard task to find an artist who can take up the work where it has been dropped, and carry it through to completion.

Telephones In Japan

Any person who complains if he has to wait several days to have his phone installed, should read the experience of an American woman who has gone to Japan to live. In Japan the telephone system is owned by the government. She writes:

"I have given up hope of having a telephone. That utility, deemed a necessity in America, is a luxury in Japan that only rich can afford. In Tokio telephone subscribers must buy the instrument itself, paying for it all the way from one thousand to four or five thousand yen. And after one has bought and paid for a telephone, one must pay the usual monthly fee for service. Of course, telephone owners may sell their phones just as they would sell any other article of furniture. However, very few telephone operators want to sell. An applicant waits years, sometimes, to get an instrument in his home. It is common to see an advertisement for a telephone run for months."

A Real Degenerate Discovered in Jackson

On Sunday evening in Jackson occurred what is believed to be the most ghoulish and execrable crime in the history of the city when the body of a young woman was forcibly yanked from the grave in the cemetery and stripped of its jewelry and clothes and badly mutilated by a man who coolly confesses the deed and seemingly defies the law. Benjamin Uphold 35 years of age is the culprit and he confesses he went to the cemetery at 8:30 o'clock or 9:00 taking a spade and a butcher knife also an axe. He worked steadily for two hours.

According to the story of the officers who investigated the affair they were called to the cemetery by Undertaker Knickerbocker of Jackson who had been notified by the cemetery caretaker that something was wrong with the grave of Mrs. Ray Shinn who was buried last Thursday in Woodlawn cemetery. Indications of the grave having been opened were noticed and the undertaker, accompanied by William Boyden the dead woman's father went to the place and the body was disinterred by them and removed to Knickerbocker Undertaking Parlors where an examination was conducted by two physicians. All of the clothing had been removed from the body and some locks of hair snipped from the head. The body had been cut open and the heart, part of the lungs and other organs removed. These were found later out behind the woodshed in a quart glass jar. The officers who made the discovery were amazed at the spectacle when they lifted the cover of the casket which had been hurriedly replaced after the crime and the casket re-buried.

Mrs. Shinn was the wife of Ray E. Shinn and had been married only a short time previously. She died in the Foote hospital. Uphold claims he has been in service in the World War but investigation shows he was confined in a hospital most of the time at Richmond Indiana. He says he formerly kept company with the young woman who was 19 years of age, and claims he was not angry when she married Shinn. As near as can be learned he has been very shifty in in his habits working at several different plants in Jackson in the past few weeks. He will probably be examined for his sanity at once and Kalamazoo will be his final disposition no doubt.

Booming Sunday schools seems to be the leading occupation in Southern Michigan at this writing and the latest sensation is the fact that Jackson Haven M. E. church has challenged the Drexel Park church of Chicago for a contest from now until Easter Sunday to determine which is the most popular. Haven Methodist church in Jackson during February showed the following record attendance: Feb. 1, 260; Feb. 8, 308; Feb. 15, 300. Chicago's attendance record ranges from 386 down to 350 during the same period, hence the Jackson people can reasonably expect to catch the Drexel church soon.

In all the world there is not a man so hardened in crime but he has spells of downright decency and remorse for his misdeeds. The bandit and train robber might have been a better man if had met an object lesson at the critical moment.

Pointing out that forgeries cause losses of $100,000,000 a year, the American Bankers Association has issued a warning against "Signature Snatchers." 474,000,000 Chickens in U. S.

POULTRY failed to put in a record appearance for the year 1924, says a Blue Valley Creamery Institute survey just issued. The annual estimate of the United States Department of Agriculture, which placed the farm chicken population at 474,000,000 head on January 1, 1924, flooded the nation with predictions of an oversupply. This estimate was an increase of 12 per cent over 1923 and a gain of 32 per cent since the beginning of 1920.

The unfavorable spring, together with attractive prices for poultry which led to close selling, conspired to play a trick on the market and the anticipated flood of poultry and poultry products never reached the large terminals. Receipts of dressed poultry were very light during the summer, but on December 1, 1924, 16,000,000 pounds more dressed poultry were on hand than on the same day a year ago.

"IT IS TOO LATE"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place. Doctor Lancaster arrives. Joan accuses him of deceiving her, declaring her intention of leaving. He tells her he is the patient who needs her, saying he wants help in a "big fight," but makes no further explanation. She decides to stay. Evidently Doctor Lancaster is afraid of Myers.

"There is no reason why you should not see him because he happens to be with Mr. Myers."

"Well, Miss Wentworth, you see, Mr. Myers is his secretary, and there's always a lot of business to be done."

"Doctor Jenkins, Doctor Lancaster is in no condition to attend to business," said Joan. "What is the matter with him?"

The doctor looked right and left, as if trying to find some refuge. But the girl was standing in front of him, and he could not enter the buggy without pushing her away.

"Miss Wentworth, please don't ask me about the doctor," he said. "I do my best for him. It isn't in my power to do more than I am doing."

"It is in your power to help him to be master of himself. How can the most famous surgeon in the South come here and be at the mercy of a man like Myers?"

"Why, Miss Wentworth, you've got that wrong," protested Jenkins. "Mr. Myers is only the secretary. Mr. Myers does all he can for the doctor. We've got to keep the institute together, Miss Wentworth, and we're each doing our best. You see, the trust fund wasn't made over to the doctor. He was only in charge of it, and when the money was missing it worried him. And—and—"

He stopped, as if he had caught himself babbling about something that should not have been mentioned. Then, as Joan stood aside, he leaped into the vehicle. "Good morning," he muttered, raising his hat, and drove away furiously.

Joan remained where the buggy had been. She realized that for the present she could get no help from Jenkins.

He had seemed afraid, not for himself, but for Lancaster. What had Lancaster done, then, that he should be in the power of Myers? Had he embezzled the funds of the institute?

The question was an absurd one. It was unbelievable that Lancaster should be a thief; besides, the explanation would not solve the problem at all.

She went back to the verandah. She was resolved to reach the bottom of the mystery, for Lancaster's sake; to prove her loyalty although he had withdrawn his demand on her.

As she reached the front door she was startled to hear her name spoken in the matron's room. The speaker was Myers.

"But she knows nothing at all," Mrs Fraser was saying.

"She knows a good deal too much," Myers answered. "What do you suppose the doctor brought her here for, if not to try to publish his shame to the world?"

"Aye, his shame," repeated the matron bitterly. "It's hard work for three people to try to hold up one man, without a fourth coming in."

"Well, is that his game?" demanded the secretary. "Is it or isn't it?"

"We want a nurse. You know we've often tried to get one, Mr. Myers, but they won't stay here. It's hard work taking care of the patients sometimes, when there's a rush."

"Rush!" repeated Myers scornfully. "Who'd rush to this old place with the doctor's reputation?"

"They do come, and the people trust him," said Mrs. Fraser, half crying.

"Yes," scoffed the other. "And the doctor still has his grandiose ideas about building up the institution—him that wrecked it."

"Well, that girl knows nothing, anyway."

"I tell you she means to help the doctor in his crazy plan of notoriety. She means to undo all our work in his own interests," cried Myers vehemently.

Joan walked away. She had overheard unwillingly, and enough to convince her that there was a mystery, with Myers at the bottom of it, and she had rightly sensed an enemy in him, and he in her. Now her mind was resolute to remain and fight for Lancaster. It was as if her decision, suddenly crystallized, had suddenly grown crystal-clear.

But she had not passed the entrance when the matron's door swung open violently and Myers came out. He stood confronting Joan with his insulting leer.

"Miss Wentworth," he began, "when you and I had our talk this morning you hadn't seen the doctor. You didn't know how things were situated, and I don't blame you. Now you've seen that the doctor needs a guardian. Well, I'm his guardian."

"I do not think that Doctor Lancaster needs a guardian, Mr. Myers," answered Joan, facing him steadily.

"See here, now, Miss Wentworth," said Myers, swallowing hard. "You don't get the drift of things, just as I thought. You think I'm trying to stand in the way of your work, when I'm only trying to reach a sort of working agreement to keep things in running order. That's my aim. Am I right?"

"I don't know whether you are right. I think you are extremely uncivil. Take off your hat!" flashed Joan.

Myers removed the hard hat from his head and stared at her in astonishment. He could not understand her sudden initiation of hostilities.

"Well, I reckon that's my nature, and I'm sorry," he said. He was trying to be conciliatory now. "I'm sorry if I get on your nerves, Miss Wentworth," he persisted, "but I wasn't brought up to be a ladies' man. However, I know my job, and I reckon you know yours. If you think I'm trying to stand between the doctor and you, come and see him right now."

"I have no complaint to make, and I have made none," said Joan.

"Come and see him," persisted Myers. "You're the nurse, and I guess it's up to you."

She looked at him, dismayed by his expression. "Is Doctor Lancaster worse?" she asked.

"Well, nothing that I didn't expect, but he might be better," said Myers, sneering.

He walked toward the door of Lancaster's room and opened it. Through the aperture Joan saw Lancaster stretched out in a large chair, his head bent forward on his breast, his limbs immobile. She hurried into the room.

But Myers preceded her to Lancaster's side. He raised the limp arm and turned up the sleeve. Joan saw that the skin was densely scarred with tiny punctures. Lancaster was breathing heavily, and beside him, upon a little table, was a syringe, and near that a little bottle containing a few drops of a pale fluid. Joan drew in her breath quickly. It was what she had feared.

"Morphine," said Myers. "He always does this when he comes home. Now you understand what I was trying to get at this morning, Miss Wentworth. I'm responsible for him. It's my job to keep him straight if I can. When I can't, I try. Now you see, perhaps, why he's lost his will power, and why I have to keep after him like a dog following his master. And I guess you won't think I'm trying to set him against you."

The bully in the man was coming to the surface again. He thrust out his head toward Joan.

"Because, if you do, I may as well say, Miss Wentworth, I'm the boss here. Understand that?" he continued, with a blustering air. "The doctor hires all sorts of people when he's like this, and it doesn't mean nothing. He can't pay out no salaries unless my O. K.'s on the vouchers. We want a nurse, and if you like to stay on you can. But if you stay you help me so far as the doctor's concerned, and you do what I tell you. That's straight. Is it clear or isn't it?"

Joan looked at him indifferently. "Help me put Doctor Lancaster on the bed," she said, "and then run and get me a hot-water bottle."

He scowled furiously, but he obeyed her. And all the while Joan sat at Lancaster's side watching him, her mind ran over the questions that were puzzling her.

Why had Myers spoken of Lancaster as coming home, when he lived in Avonmouth?

Who had hired him to be the doctor's keeper?

And with whom had Doctor Lancaster been speaking so bitterly in his consulting room that evening when Joan called at the house?

Chapter VI

She sat for hours beside the sick man, conscious sometimes that Myers had come in and spoken to her. But she never answered him. As the pulse strengthened she let her mind work upon the problem again. Lancaster had taken an immense overdose, one inconceivable in the ordinary morphine habitue. And he must have taken it during the brief period when Myers was with him; he must have taken it as soon as he got back to his room. Why had Myers permitted it?

At last Lancaster opened his eyes. His gaze fell upon Joan's face, at first without recognition, then with wonder.

"Water!" he gasped, after a few ineffectual attempts to speak.

Joan drew a glassful and gave it to him, and then another. Lancaster gulped down the liquid greedily. Presently he sat up, stood on his feet, and groped his way to the chair.

"I'm sorry," he said, looking at Joan with a whimsical expression. "I should have told you."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am ashamed of you," said Joan.

"God knows I'm ashamed of myself," he burst out fretfully. "Miss Wentworth, in the third drawer of that desk, beneath a pile of letters, you'll find a bottle—"

"No," said Joan decisively.

She knew by the wholly unnecessary secrecy in the concealment, characteristic of the drug habitue that Lancaster had gone a long way down the declivity.

"Miss Wentworth, you misunderstand me. It's an antidote for alkaloidal poisoning. I was experimenting with a new drug."

Joan found herself sobbing, and she was astounded. It was the wreck of the man's moral nature that was unbearable. She saw the latent fineness in him, and it was as if the needless lie was the voice of the morphine devil that spoke through his lips.

Lancaster looked distressed. "Miss Wentworth, you had better leave me and go back to Avonmouth on the evening train," he said. "I ought never to have brought you here. It was pure selfishness on my part. Miss Wentworth, please don't cry. Go away now, and we'll talk it over before you start for the station."

"If I go away," wept Joan, "you'll take another hypodermic."

"I pledge you my word of honor no," said Lancaster, with almost ingenuous candor. "I am really not accustomed to such a thing; that is why it knocked me out. I have been suffering from insomnia, and I tried a new alkaloid—not morphine, you know, but a derivative—for the benefit of my patients."

The words came from his lips so glibly that Joan was almost convinced—would have been, had not the first lie been different. She hesitated. She had no intention of leaving the room, but she turned away.

Lancaster misunderstood her action. With incredible swiftness his hand shot out toward the little bottle. He had uncorked it and plunged in the syringe before the girl could snatch it away.

"Your word of honor!" said Joan.

He leaned back in his chair and looked at her with amusement.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, "you are a nurse. Surely you are aware that I am not to be trusted, that my word of honor is worthless? That I am essentially devoid of honesty and decency? Don't you know that this accursed thing"—he pointed toward the bottle—"robs men of their honor and self-respect, and lowers them beneath the beasts?"

He spoke as if at a clinic, and quite impersonally; there was the shadow of a whimsical smile about his lips, which twitched, nevertheless, with pain.

"That does not refer to you," answered Joan. "You asked me to help you in the biggest fight of your life. Well, I am going to help you in that fight."

"It is too late," said Lancaster.

"Never!" replied Joan valiantly.

"You don't understand, Miss Wentworth. That's the mistake all people make in trying to cure us. Don't you know that a man or woman never becomes a victim to a drug except from sleeplessness, or physical pain, or under stress of mental anguish? If you could cure me the old trouble would still be there. I should fall a victim again. Life is worthless to me, Miss Wentworth," he ended, quite simply.

> The truth is out at last. The morphine habit is hard to cure. Will Joan succeed?

Writing on Pinhead Is No Longer a Novelty

Wandering about town one might get the idea that America had developed a new industry—that of engraving the Lord's prayer on pinheads. The impression is strengthened if one takes to visiting the regions in which sideshows flourish, near town or along the rustic routes of the traveling shows.

Considering that the man who engraved the prayer on a pin a few years ago was reported to have gone blind and insane as a result of his three years of application, one might almost pause to ask if all this pin engraving were not dangerous. There is no fear, however; the engraved pin business has been placed on a safe and sane basis, remarks the New York Times.

The original pin was all that has been said for it. On a disk forty-seven one-thousandths of an inch in diameter there were engraved 65 words with 254 letters, and nearly 2,000 lines had to be cut in doing it. The original might conceivably have got lost in a sewing basket and gone the way of all pins. But a die was made of it—no inconsiderable job in itself—and the market is now supplied from the die.

Epidemic Among Birds

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Live, Elastic Rubber
If you cut a strip of rubber from a "U. S." Boot, you'd find it would stretch more than five times its length—and snap back into place every time, like an elastic band.
It's this live, elastic rubber that explains why "U. S." Boots stand repeated bending and wrinkling—and stay waterproof.

Double Protection

Two big features which mean weeks of extra wear for "U.S." Boots

Live, elastic rubber—layer on layer of reinforcements—these two features guard the life of "U.S." Boots.

No more live and elastic rubber has ever been used in boot construction than that which goes into "U.S." Boots.

Anchored in this rubber are tough fabric reinforcements—as many as eleven separate layers of rubber and fabric, where the hard strains come. They give rugged strength to stand the hardest kind of wear.

"U.S." Boots are protected against destructive bending and wrinkling—against the knocks and strains that shorten the life of ordinary boots.

No wonder people everywhere are finding that "U.S." Boots mean longer wear! It will pay you to ask for "U.S."

Other "U.S." Rubber Footwear

You'll find every type of rubber footwear in the big "U.S." line. There's the "U.S." Walrus, the famous all-rubber overshoe—the "U.S." lace Bootee, an all-rubber workshoe—and "U.S." Rubbers and Arctics, for every member of the family. Look for the "U.S." Trade-mark whenever you buy.

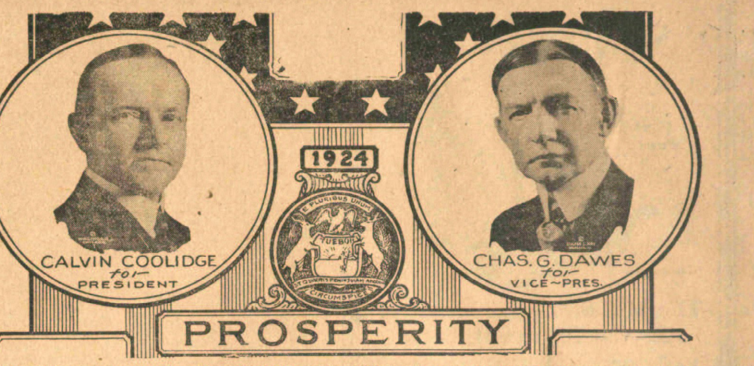
COOLIDGE & DAWES



THESE MEN were handed the reins of government on Wednesday and swore the solemn oath of all the Presidents to uphold the Constitution of the United States to the best of thefr ability. They will go into officc with vastly better prospects and backing than either Woodrow Wilson or Warren Harding, since the country is at peace, commerce is re-instated after the World war, and transportation problems are pretty much ironed out In the choice of Calvin Coolidge for President, the Nation has shown a wonderful discretion. Honest "Cal" has shown his ability to cut down expenses, and the days of extravagence which this government has been subjected to under other administrations will not recur under the careful management of our Puritan president. Matters pertaining to Domestie affairs will be adjusted so as to aid the class who feed us all—the great middle class who till the soil, the great National backbone, without which no nation could long endure, and our commanwealth would be a rope of straw. Of the man who has become vice president we have no conscience to speak. We believe the country will be immensely fortunate if he is never by necessity placed in the Presidential chair. If the same calamity shonld befall this country the second time, then it would indeed be a hard trial to place Charles Dawes at the head of affairs with his "Hell and Maria" tactics,

Charley Dawes is now vice president ot the United States. Charley is the boy who helped Lorimer to put a bad deal over on the Illinois bank inspectors a few years ago with the result that some four thousand bank depositors lost one and one fourth millions of dollars. Lorimer was expelled from the U. S. Senate while Dawes went free for seven years when the Illinois Supreme court held him financially responsible, according to the Toledo News Bee which is one of the real representatives of the people. But Charley will never serve any time behind the walls of Joliet prison, of course not: because Charley is one of the biggest bankers in the country and then he is also one of the bossess of Chicago University, an institution where professors dare not express an opinion concerning the menace of the money power If a bandit takes a six shooter, holds up a pedestrian robs him of a dollar is caught and convicted, the judge if he desires, may send the bandit to prison for twenty years, but here is Dawes helping Lorimer to wreck the life savings of not one person but thousands of persons and while the bandit receives a prison sentence, Dawes, through the assistance of 15 million voters gets the vice presidency of the United States

Death of Daniel A. Wisner

Daniel A. Wisner who has resided near this village for many years and has been confined to the home for over one year and ill much longer than that, passed away Tuesday.

Daniel Allen Wisner the fourth child of Horace and Rachel Hudnut Wisner was born in the town of Nunda, Livingston County, New York on March twelfth 1843 and died at his home near North Adams Michigan, March tenth 1925, two days before his eighty second birthday.

In May of the year of his birth his parents came as pioneers to Michigan and settled in Moscow township, Hillsdale County where he passed his youth and early manhood.

January fifth 1865 he was united in marriage to Henrietta Warner. To this union were born two children, a son who died in infancy and Jessie Henrietta who died in early womanhood. Mrs. Wisner died in 1868 soon after the birth of Jessie.

On September fifth 1871 Daniel was married to Cynthia Jane Curdy who survives him. To their union were born five children: Ina Claire of Cleveland, Ohio; Adah Elizabeth (Mrs. O. R. Thompson) of Jackson Michigan; Fred Curdy of North Adams; Burr Allen of Garden Grove California; and Rubie Jane (Mrs. M. D. Good) of Charleston, West Virginia.

Mr. Wisner was always interested in the welfare of his community and his fellow citizens honored him by electing him to serve as treasurer of the township for two terms and as supervisor of the township for seven terms. In those offices he tried to serve honestly and efficiently.

For over fifty years he was a member of Adams Lodge No. 189 of the Free and Accepted Order of Masons. It was his purpose to live up to the ideals of his fraternity and he was liked and respected by his brother Masons.

The funeral services were held at the residence Thursday March 12th at 10 a. m. conducted by the Rev. Virgil Hunt. Burial was in the North Adams cemetery. The burial service at the grave was conducted by Adams Lodge No. 189 of the Free and Accepted Order of Masons.

Village Election Monday

We understand the voting interest shown at the polls of the village on Monday was not very strong as only 25 ballots were cast The personnel of the village officials is as follows: President, Merton N. Wolcott; clerk, Howard Williams; assessor, Frank W. Holcomb; treasurer, Fred W. Payne; trustees (full term) Darwin Carney, Harley Fry, Glenn Mercer; (vacancy to fill unexpired term of W. W. Clingerman) Lewis Eggleston, Fred Baker and Bert Taylor

We have been promised some repairs on the back streets this season, something which has been woefully neglected for too long. It is hoped the town selectmen will see the necessity of a few loads of gravel in the spots which are in worse shape this spring than ever before.

Benjamin Uphold, confessed desecrater of graves and body snatcher in Jackson who was ordered examined by two doctors pending insanity has been dubbed as plain nutty by the physicians, but their word don't go with Judge Parkinson who questioned Uphold a little himself. He is not satisfied with the verdict of the doctors and will order a jury trial. If the good and true men agree that the culprit is insane, it will have to stand and Uphold's destination will be the asylum, otherwise he will have to take prison punishment. The Judge is adverse to committing the prisoner to the bug college probably thinking if he could get out in Indiana, he might do likewise here and for other technical reasons. Uphold's line of conversation if correctly quoted would lead one to believe he was merely lacking. or a half witted degenerate and he may be neither. His latest story is that he had intended to dig up the body and secrete it, but his claim of former acquaintance is indignantly denied by the girl's father William Boyden who says that his daughter attended the same church and Sunday school as Uphold, and that was all. The father may and he may not know whereof he speaks at any rate the case is bound over to the court, and from Judge Parkinson's attitude it would appear matters are not as they seem.

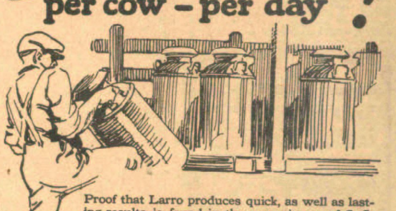
10 lbs. more! per cow – per day!



Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

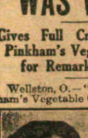
MRS. WM. BUTTS WAS VERY SICK

Gives Full Credit to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for Remarkable Recovery



Wellston, O.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make me strong. I was troubled with my back and sides hurting me till I could not do my work, and whenever I caught cold it made me irregular. Since I have taken the Vegetable Compound my side and back don't bother me and I can do my housework and care for my children now, where before I did not feel like doing anything or going around. After my first child was born about four years ago I saw an advertisement in the paper about the Vegetable Compound. I knew it would help me, but I was afraid to try it because people said it would help you to have children and I knew I was having children fast enough. But I thought if it would help me it would be better to have a whole house full of children and have good health. I became stronger from taking it and my husband says I look like a live woman instead of a dead one. When Spring comes I am going to take your Blood Medicine as I am very thin. I will answer letters from any woman who wishes to ask about your medicine."—Mrs. WILLIAM BUTTS, Wellston, Ohio.

"ARE YOU A WITCH?"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place. Doctor Lancaster arrives. Joan accuses him of deceiving her, declaring her intention of leaving. He tells her he is the patient who needs her, saying he wants help in a "big fight," but makes no further explanation. She decides to stay. Evidently Doctor Lancaster is afraid of Myers. Joan discovers that the doctor is a victim of the morphine habit. Joan takes charge of him, helping him to overcome temporarily his craving for the drug. Myers accuses her of "meddling," but she refuses to leave or to give up her care of Lancaster.

"For happiness, perhaps—I don't know. But not for duty. Your life is to be used, Doctor Lancaster, for the sake of the people, and I am going to help you use it. Your wonderful skill—"

He groaned at the words. Joan saw that, though he was suffering physically, there was some mental trouble which her words had evoked.

"Doctor Lancaster," she said, "the first thing you have to do is to use your will. And I am going to give you your first test, a little one only. It will last thirty seconds. Can you put forth your will for just that length of time?"

He fixed his eyes anxiously on hers and nodded. Yet she saw them waver toward the bottle.

"I am going to cross the room," she said. "Don't stir a finger till I return."

She heard Myers in the hall, and, going to the door, she turned the key. She heard Myers halt near her door. But she had no time to think of him. She went back to Lancaster, whose hands were strained hard against the arms of the chair.

"Well done!" she said.

"Miss Wentworth, I must have that hypodermic now."

"I want you to wait. Wait half an hour, Doctor Lacaster.

"I can't!" he cried, starting up. "I tell you I must have it. After an overdose one must have a smaller one. It will set me up nicely. Just half the quantity, Miss Wentworth."

"In half an hour," said Joan.

He sprang to his feet, shaking and furious. "Give me that bottle at once!" he cried.

"In half an hour."

Lancaster sat down. "Confound you, why ever did you come here?" he asked. "Suppose that I discharge you?"

"I shall not go, Doctor Lancaster. We have covered that point in our conversation already."

Then, seeing his distress, she went on rapidly: "Listen to me, Doctor Lancaster. You brought me here upon an impulse, because you had no one whom you could trust. You wanted to fight and you wanted me to fight with you. Well, I am going to do it, and we are going to win." She took out her watch and laid it on the table. "In twenty-five minutes you shall have half a dose. Then we shall have won the first skirmish. O, Doctor Lancaster, fight like a man and help us win!"

She spoke with so much earnestness that she kindled his enthusiasm. "Yes, we'll make the fight!" he cried, with blazing eyes. "If only I had had you long ago!"

He was in the full reaction from his despondency. He struck his fist emphatically upon the arm of the chair. "I'll be a man again!" he cried. "If you knew everything, Miss Wentworth, you might understand how a man can be caught in a snare of his own making. But I'll win, with your aid, and I'll be my own master again."

"You are your own master now, Doctor Lancaster. Always think that and remember it."

"My own master? When that hound follows me—"

"Mr. Myers is your servant."

Lancaster laughed harshly. "By heaven!" he cried, "I'll tell him so. Miss Wentworth, give me that dose now, so that I can feel like a man again and have the strength to send him about his business."

"It will give you strength," she answered, "but it will not make you yourself, your better self. You will no longer want to send him about his business."

Lancaster stared at her. "How do you know that?" he asked. "Are you a witch? It's true. But I can't wait any longer. I have waited fifteen minutes. Half an hour next time. Miss Wentworth, the third drawer—"

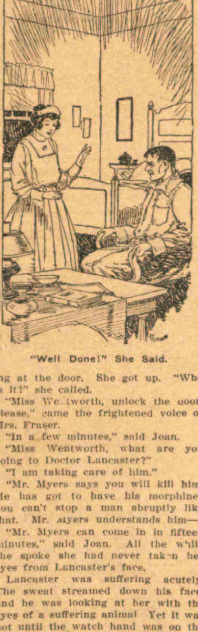
As her eyes went toward the desk he snatched up the bottle and hypodermic from the table. Joan caught at his wrist. But Lancaster had already plunged the syringe into the fluid, and he was upon his feet.

He tried to free his hand, he fought furiously, but Joan succeeded in knocking the bottle from his grasp. It fell upon the table. Lancaster righted it, and suddenly darted toward the desk. Joan caught him. He flung her across the room. He had got the drawer open when she grappled with him again.

He struck at her with his right hand, beating her about the wrists, but she would not let go. She would never leave go, not though he struck her in the face. He tossed her this way and that, but she never unclasped her hold. At last he dropped into his chair exhausted and covered his face with his hands.

"Twelve minutes more," said Joan triumphantly, looking at her watch.

Then she realized that all through the struggle there had been a hammering at the door. She got up. "Who is it?" she called.



"Well Done!" She Said.

"Miss Wentworth, unlock the door, please," came the frightened voice of Mrs. Fraser.

"In a few minutes," said Joan.

"Miss Wentworth, what are you doing to Doctor Lancaster?"

"I am taking care of him."

"Mr. Myers says you will kill him. He has got to have his morphine; you can't stop a man abruptly like that. Mr. Myers understands him—"

"Mr. Myers can come in in fifteen minutes," said Joan. All the while she spoke she had never taken her eyes from Lancaster's face.

Lancaster was suffering acutely. The sweat streamed down his face, and he was looking at her with the eyes of a suffering animal Yet it was not until the watch hand was on the hour that Joan took the bottle from the desk.

"The whole bottle is a normal dose," said Lancaster, through his teeth.

Joan drew one-fourth into the syringe.

"You must give me all, Miss Wentworth. That little quantity is useless."

He was lying about the strength of the dose, and he knew that Joan knew. She did not answer him. He extended his arm, and she plunged the needle into the wrist. Then she corked the bottle and she put it into the pocket of her uniform, having previously added the small quantity in the bottle upon the table.

The hammering at the door had begun again. But the girl waited until the spasms of pain disappeared from Lancaster's face. He rose.

"Miss Wentworth!" he began gratefully. Then, catching sight of her bruised wrists, he took her hands in his.

"Did I do that?" he cried.

"Not you, Doctor Lancaster," answered Joan, snatching her wrists away. "Your enemy—our enemy, who is now worsted in his first field of battle."

"Miss Wentworth, you see now what I am. I can't hold you to your promise. You must leave me. Who's that at the door?"

"We shall see," answered Joan, and unlocked it.

Myers was standing outside, white with rage, and with him was Doctor Jenkins, looking uneasy and embarrassed; his eyes fell before Joan's.

"Tell her what you told me!" stammered Myers, beside himself with his anger.

"Miss Wentworth," faltered Jenkins, "indeed you don't understand what you are doing. Doctor Lancaster—"

"Is a mighty sick man," burst out the secretary. "And it's my job to prevent him from being killed by meddlers. He picked this nurse up somewhere and she's trying to get rid of me and have the charge of the doctor. I won't stand for it," he added to Joan. "I warned you twice today, and you paid no attention to me. Now you can pack up and leave the institute. Isn't that right, doctor?" he added, to Lancaster.

To Joan's stupefaction, Lancaster's old irresolution had already returned, and more; he seemed to ally himself with the secretary. The morphine, which had restored his body, had lent him its own false personality.

"Well, you see, Miss Wentworth means well," he said slowly, "but she doesn't realize conditions. You see," he added, turning to Joan but not meeting her eyes, "one has to taper off very slowly in a desperate case like mine. I'm very far gone, and heroic measures are useless."

"That's right. Now tell her to go," said Myers.

"Yes, Miss Wentworth, I really don't believe that you can do any good here," said Lancaster obediently. "It was a mistake. You shall be paid a full month's salary. Ask Mr. Myers to make out your check."

"She can drive back with Doctor Jenkins now," suggested Myers

"She can drive back with Doctor Jenkins," agreed Lancaster, and Joan saw the secretary's pale face blaze with triumph.

"And you might get me a few more bottles from the storeroom," whispered Lancaster to Myers. "I'm very shaky. I must have enough on hand in case I wake up in the night. You understand my needs, Myers," he continued, with a catch of self-pity in his voice.

Joan did not hesitate a moment. She slipped between the two men and ran to the storeroom. With a muttered oath Myers ran after her. The girl was just in time to slam the door in his face and lean against it inside, bracing her foot against a plank and using the whole weight of her body.

She heard Myers breathe heavily as he tried to force his entrance. He dashed himself madly against it, but Joan knew that she would die rather than yield.

"Open that door!" shrieked Myers, in uncontrolled fury. "Open at once, do you hear me?"

Joan looked hastily about her. Some instinct seemed to tell her that the case of morphine bottles was hidden under the linen pile in the near corner. By stretching out one hand without giving way in the least Joan could just reach far enough to toss away the napkins. There were dozens of the tiny bottles in the packing case beneath—enough to kill a herd of oxen.

Joan heard Jenkins' protesting voice outside, and the irresolute tones of Lancaster. The matron was speaking, too. The girl did not know what they were saying to Myers, beyond the general sense of their expostulations, but she felt her will ride high above the storm of conflict.

A hammer lay on the shelf. Joan took it in her hand.

"Listen!" she cried to those outside. "I have the morphine and I have the hammer. And I am going to break every bottle in this room—"

Lancaster cried out pitifully at her words. "Miss Wentworth, you will kill me if you do!"

"Unless this case passes into my possession. I am going to have the storeroom key, and I am going to take charge of Doctor Lancaster, who has employed me for that especial purpose, during this month."

The silence of stupefaction outside was complete. Joan flung the door open boldly and stood before the group, the hammer in her hand. She saw Lancaster, with eyes bent inquiringly upon hers, the matron and Jenkins, mute, and Myers, leaning against the opposite wall of the passage, regarding her with venomous impotence.

"Well, what do you say to that, doctor?" he sneered.

Joan is putting up a good fight against big odds. Is Doctor Lancaster worth saving?

Glass Flowers Are Close Imitation of Nature

Marvelous artificial blooms that resemble nature's finest specimens in every respect except scent, are now being made by expert glassblowers.

Every part of the flower or plant is faithfully reproduced, from the long, delicate stems and colored petals to the almost invisible pollen.

The first thing which the maker of these wonderful blooms does is to blow the petals from glass as thin and fragile as tissue paper. The glass petals are then shaped and colored exactly like the natural ones.

Some of the rarer plants cannot be easily reproduced, and often several experiments have to be carried out with different colors before a really good imitation is obtained.

These glass flowers are used extensively in museums, both to show details of plant or flower formation and as backgrounds for displaying specimens of birds and beasts.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

State Will Assume Trunk Line Costs According to Bill Passed By House

Lansing—The Ming proposal for the assumption by the state of all responsibility and cost of construction and maintenance of trunk line highway, has been passed by the house by a vote of 71 to 14. The counties have been paying half of the cost, and it is estimated that the Ming scheme will save between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 for the various counties, and saddle that amount, as Ming described it, on the automobiles of the state, where it belongs.

All the work would be done by the state highway department, which operates under the administrative board.

Before the Ming bill passed an attempt was made to amend it. Representative George Watson, of St. Clair county, proposed that the counties be required to pay 10 per cent of the costs of maintenance and 5 per cent of the costs of construction of the highways, simply, he said, so that the counties would be able to have a voice in the state highway commission's operations in their individual cases. Several Wayne county members favored this amendment, which was lost by a vote of 78 to 19.

Handbook Bill Reported Out

The Bahorski Anti-Gambling Bill was voted out of the Senate Judiciary Committee with the recommendation that the bill pass.

No opposition to the bill has developed in the Senate and it is expected to ride through to final passage without interruption. In 1923, practically the same measure was adopted unanimously, and there is no reason to believe there has been any serious change in sentiment.

As the bill comes from committee it is unchanged even in verbiage. When it came up in the Judiciary Committee several suggestions for improving it were made, but in each instance Senator Joseph Bahorski, sponsor of the bill and co-author with Detroit judges and other persons interested in stamping out the gambling evil, was able to show that the original wording excelled the suggestions.

School District Bill Passes

Relief for the congestion of Redford Union school districts is seen in the passage by the House of the Bristow bill providing for the exemption of rural agricultural school districts from the bonding limitation of 8 per cent on districts with from 15,000 to 100,000 population. The bill, introduced by Rep. Fred W. Bristow, of Highland Park, passed unanimously.

The population of this district is now 18,000. Two years ago it was 5,000. Its school facilities consist of an eight-room building erected in 1922, and twice remodeled. The bond limitation, according to Rep. Bristow, precluded the building of more schools. Under his bill if it becomes law, the district may issue bonds in amounts to provide sufficient schools.

Agree On Transit Bill

William M. Donnelly, attorney for the Detroit Rapid Transit Commission; John L. Lovett, secretary of the Michigan Manufacturers Association, and Rep. Sherman D. Callender, of Detroit, met here and agreed to the amendments that the Callender Rapid Transit Bill will carry when it is brought up before the House Committee on City Corporations. Most of the amendments were suggested by Mr. Lovett who was responsible for tying up the bill when it seemed that it might be reported out of committee in its original form.

Would Revoke Driver's Licenses

A bill introduced by Rep. Sherman D. Callender, of Detroit, would make it mandatory on the secretary of state to revoke automobile operators' licenses upon conviction of any felony in which a motor car figured, of driving while drunk, or under the influence of drugs, of and leaving the scene of an accident without reporting name and address.

To Limit Christmas Trees

Senator James C. Quinlan, of Grand would prohibit the cutting of Christmas trees with a butt diameter of less than four inches, and to license wholesalers at $10 each, and retailers $5, according to a bill which he has introduced.

Reports of Tax Collections

Senator James C. Quinian, of Grand Rapids, has introduced a bill to require county treasurers to make monthly reports of tax collections to the state treasurer, and to pay 1 per cent interest on all sums withheld.

Stockholders May Lose Rights

Stockholders in trust, security and deposit companies would be shorn of heir present rights to vote for directors under the so-called cumulative plan, if a bill introduced in the House by Rep. Charles H. Culver, of Detroit, is passed. Mr. Culver said that the bill was sent to him by an official of a Detroit trust company, but he declined to divulge the name of the official or of the company. The cumulative plan was created for the small stockholder.

State Plans Probe of Charges

Investigation of charges by Eugene Brown, of St. Ignace, that members of the highway department were profiting by contracts, has been ordered by the state administrative board. Attorney General Andrew B. Dougherty will have charge of the investigation. The charges were made in a letter by Brown to Governor Alex J. Groesbeck. Highway Commissioner Frank F. Rogers told the board Brown was disgruntled because he had failed to obtain paving contracts.

John Owen recently handed us some copies of the Hillsdale "Weekly Business" published at Hillsdale June 17, 1871 one of the early papers published in this county. It consists of two pages only six columns and is filled with college news and general stuff. In it we note the poem of Will Carleton which has since been given world wide fame "Over the Hill to The Poorhouse" also a copy of the ancient "Hillsdale Democrat" published by William Tallman bearing date October 10, 1879. In this paper we note the names of W. D. Childs and Co. Drygoods dealers, The Poor Man's Friend, Kochenthal Brothers, B. B. Hecock, W. R. Montgomery, Lawyer; A. F. Whelan, physician; R. A. Ernie Maurer Found a Bottle

Liquor doesn't grow on trees but you can find it almost any place on the ground near a dance hall. If you don't believe it ask Ernest Maurer of Homer, who found a bottle of the high-powered substance underneath a coupe in Allen on Saturday Feb. 28. Ernest took a drink of it, then he drank a little more and finally he got pretty drunken. Ernest was quite earnest when he looked up the dance hall in the village and demanded attention while he displayed the latest in shimmy steps

Everything seemed to go all right except Ernie's feet. On the dance floor wherever he went his feet just wouldn't go. In trying to assemble himself, he was arrested and before Justice Glenn E. Miller he pleaded guilty and took his dose which was $10 fine and ten days in jail. Ernie thinks it is easy to find liquor most any place, at least that's what he told Justice Miller.

Training Camps

Brigadier General Benjamin A. Poore at Headquarters Sixth Corps Area announced today the allotment of candidates for the Citizens' Military Training Camps to be held in the Sixth Corps Area, which comprises the states of Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. Under instructions from the War Department 5600 applications must be secured from the states of Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Two C. M. T. Camps will be established, one at Jefferson Barrack Mo., for young men from southern and central Illinois, and one at Camp Custer, Mich., for young men from northern Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. Four thousand four hundred young men will be trained in these two camps.

The purpose of these camps is to bring together young men of high type from all sections of the country on a common basis of equality and under the most favorable conditions of outdoor life; to stimulate and promote citizenship, patriotism and Americanism; and, through expert physical direction, athletic coaching and military training, to benefit the young men individually and bring them to realize their obligations to their country. Any healthy, normal young man between the ages of 17 and 24, who is of good moral character may attend the camp. The government will pay expenses for young men attending camp, transportation from their home to camp and return, and will provide uniforms, food, medical attention, housing and laundry while at camp.

This is the fifth year for the Citizens' Military Trainiug Camps, which are becoming increasingly popular with young men and their parents so much so, in fact, that even with the increase in numbers that can be trained, made possibly by increased appropriations by Congress for this purpose, places for all applicants cannot be provided. It therefore behooves young men who wish to be assured of an opportunity to avail themselves of this privilege to make application at once.

The Commanding General, Sixth Corps Area, 1819 West Pershing Road, Chicago, Illinois will gladly furnish further information about attendance and application blanks.

Private Owned Airplanes Not For Near Future

Future progress in the aeronautical industry will not be made through the development of the privately owned and operated plane but by the regular air lines, operated and controlled by private companies. This is the belief of William F. Gerhardt, late of the aeronautical engineering college of the University of Michigan and now Chief of the Flight Research Branch of the Flight Division at McCook Field.

"I look for much more cautious development of privately owned planes because the problem of maintenance in the airplane is much more intricate and costly than that of the automobile." he said recently. "Danger of operating a private plane is another element which affords a considerable draw back to the development of privately owned planes" he added, expressing at the same time the belief that with "proper education of the public and regulation by the government the commercial light plane will become as widely used a vehicle as the automobile."

Commenting upon the recently expressed opinion of Major Edward Rickenbacker before the military affairs committee of the House, chief Gerhardt stated that "present estimates of the ultimate application and wide use of aviation are not at all exaggerated." Major Rickenbacker's prophecy was that within 25 years the United States would be spanned both from east to west and north to south by air trunk lines, with an airdome and landing field in every city of 25,000 or over, for the use of air mail and commercial aviation.

The beginning of the year 1925, Mr. Gebhardt said marked the opening of a new era in aeronautics, during which "we may confidently look forward to a development of the aeronautical industry as swift, if not swifter, than that of the automobile. Mr. Gerhard cited the recent meeting of the heads of the larger commercial aircraft companies with representatives of the Army and Navy in New York, to determine defintely the amount of support to be given the industry by the goverment.

Regarding the advisability of government subsidy of the industry an arrangement now in effect in several countries of Europe, Chief Gerhardt indicated that he thought such a move in this country at this time would undoubtedly work harm to the industry.

An Ingenious Reporter

The Jackson Daily News certainly has a clever reporter, inasmuch as he is able to manufacture most any kind of hair-raising tale out of ordinary news items and his latest is an account of a recent accident which happened at the Meadow Lark Inn in the suburbs of Jackson, when there was an explosion of gases in a soft coal heater in the home and pieces of the stove flew in all directions, one fragment of the magazine weighing 30 pounds striking the back of a chair in which the lady of the house had been sitting. Fortunately no one was hurt but burning coal and soot were thrown helter-skelter, which threatened a serious fire but the man of the house put it out with a fire extinguisher. not until a large rug and other furniture were ruined.

It transpires that back of the stove was an old-fashioned stoue fire-place alongside the bake oven. This was somewhat torn up and in the debris were found two human toes in a good state of preservation cut cleanly off, and no one could account for them. The News reporter at once got busy and he had a grewsome murder hatched which took place a long time ago. Investigation shows that 50 years or so ago a former owner chopped off a couple of toes with an axe, and wishing souvenirs he put them in alcohol and hid them in the oven. At that time alcoholic products could not have been as scarce as now, or he would have drank the pickle and put the toes in his pocket. Last fall an old barn caught fire in an alley at Jackson. After the excitement had fizzled parts of a dismembered human body were picked up. Believe us, the News cub got right down to business. The remains he stated were evidence of a terrible murder and arson. It developed that a scientific and unfeeling doctor had procured a cadaver for experimental purposes and immersed arms and other parts in alcohol. Later he removed or died, and left his doings behind, which indicates that doctors are uncanny cusses anyhow. Thus the old world waggeth along —and the wags increase.

Capital Punishment in Michigan

An example of how things have changed the sentiment in Michigan during the last two or three years, the Capital Punishment Bill which is again under consideration in the capital gets a favorable hearing before the law makers. The bill is sponsored by Representative McEachron and would provide the death penalty by electrocution for murderers and homicides only and they on other than purely circumstantial evidence. The speaker of the House anticipates some mud throwing antics when this bill comes up for consideration before that august body for its final disposition, as there are bitter opponents as well as friends. However, it is not likely so much sob stuff from the female contingent will be heard as formerly. The last appearance of this bill before congress was the signal for the dolorous squad and "conscientious objectors" to create a disturbance, In fact they made a "vale of tears" in the galleries. The advocates are positive they have enough votes to swing the measure through.

No Freedom Like United States

An anti Bolshevist meeting was held in New York recently to hear Morris Gordin tell "Why I lost my faith in Communistic Russia."

Newspaper reports stated that "One third of the 600 persons at the meeting were women. The audience applauded every point Gordin made against present condition in Russia, and there seemed to be unanimous approval of this declaration that Russia was slowly but surely progressing toward a republic of the United States of Russia. "The speaker, formerly a student at University of Chicago was a draft soldier in the American army during the World war. Until 1921, when he went to Russia, he was one of the leaders of the New York Communist Party. He returned here last September. Describing his conclusions regarding his nearly three years of experience in Russia, Gordin said:

"I went there expecting to find a heaven of the people and for the workers; instead I found a hell. The people may change this situation at any time, but when I left they seemed everywhere, so far as I noted, to be passively resentful, too hopeless to assert themselves. All around there was going on the economic, industrial and moral ruin of Russia.

In the meantime the leaders of this situation are holding on to the shreds of Communism in their visionary scheme of getting thro propaganda among other nationals support for Communistic domination. These selfish, misguided men now in control, have trampled Russia politically into a big prison a red dungeon. Before the unfortunate Russian people, most of whom would like to end their sufferings under this colossal failure can expect any concrete help from other countries they must show their resentment of this false doctrine by attacking it themselves.

Piosonous Gas and Aeroplanes

Undoubtedly the next war is going to be one fought in the main with poisons and aircraft. Foreign powers have in the recent past made and are still making far reaching experiments with various types of poison gases. Futhermore, one foreign nation has at least two thousand five hundred airplanes in active peace time service and possibly four thousand eight hundred other planes in reserve. Contrast this with our nineteen battleplanes and our very few serviceable observation planes Suppose that the above mentioned foreign power were to declare war on us and establish an air base on or near this continent. Two thousand of her planes, each carrying a quarter of a ton of gas, could drop five hundred tons of death dealing material. Such a fleet of planes could wipe out any of the large cities of this country in record time. And the tragic part of this whole story is that the inhabitants of a city would probably have no knowledge that an attack was being made until they felt the effects of the gas. This would be particularly true in the case of gas bombs dropped outside the city limits, so that the clouds of poisonous material shall be blown toward the habitations by wind.

The effectiveness of gases is increased by the fact that they hug the ground and penetrate cellars, subways and coal mines.

Although the other powerful nations of of the world are proceeding as usual in the construction of battle planes and other aircraft, the United States is falling far behind. According to Brig. General William Mitchell, New York, the greatest city of the United States and the most important seaport, is defenseless against an aerial attack. Only 19 planes in the United States today are fit to fight and the General says that because of their age and condition he would not be responsible for ordering out any one of these planes for active battle service. He furthermore states that commercial aviation in the United States is practically at a standstill, whereas in other countries that branch of aerial navigation is progressing with leaps and bounds.

In the particular case of New York City, a fleet of large battle planes could quickly annihilate every living being. The gas would settle in the cellars and subways and would penatrate every building. Every line of transportation would be completely tied up, and as New York City is entirely surrounded by water, the millions of inhabitants could not leave the city quickly enough to prevent enormous loss of life. Our aerial defense needs stimulating.

TASTY FOODS

An old Virginia recipe for johnny cake may be prepared as follows, but baked in an oven if the old-fashioned method is not available:

Virginia Johnny Cake.—Sift one quart of corn meal into a bowl, pour on gradually one pint of warm water in the center and mix gradually until a smooth batter is formed. Beat until light, adding a teaspoonful of salt. Spread thick on a smooth board and bake before the fire until brown. When done cut into squares, split and butter and send to the table.

Windsor Sandwiches.—Cream one-third of a cupful of butter, add one-half cupful each of chopped cooked chicken and ham that has been boiled. Spread the mixture on buttered bread and cover with another slice of buttered bread. Cut into fancy shapes and serve.

Oyster Salad.—Select large, plump oysters, allowing six for each person. Parboil them in their own liquor and drain. Cut the oysters into bits and mix with an equal quantity of crisp fresh lettuce broken into bits. Stir in a boiled dressing and pile on a plate edged with lettuce.

Steamed Brown Bread.—Take one cupful of sweet and sour milk, two cupfuls of corn meal, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, a teaspoonful of salt, two-thirds of a cupful of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of soda, beat well and steam two hours.

Celery and Oyster Bisque.—Cover one cupful of finely chopped celery with one pint of water and stew slowly one-half hour. Drain and wash two dozen oysters; throw them into a saucepan and shake over the fire, cooking them five minutes. Drain, saving all the liquor. Mix the celery with the oysters which have been chopped, add the liquor and one quart of rich milk. Mix well two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour, add to the soup and cook ten minutes. Strain through a fine sieve, adding salt and white pepper to taste. Serve in bouillon cups.

Stuffed Figs.—Use the pulled figs, cut a slit in the side and stuff with seasoned cream cheese.

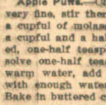
TEMPTING GOOD THINGS

A good vegetable soup should be served frequently in every family.



Cream Vegetable Soup.—Scrape and slice thin three large parsnips and two carrots. Peel and slice one large onion, two white turnips and one cupful of the outside stalks of celery cut fine. Cook all slowly in three tablespoonfuls of butter, until well-browned. Sprinkle with two tablespoonfuls of flour, add gradually two quarts of boiling water, cover and simmer gently for an hour and a half. Add one pint of cooked chopped spinach, cook fifteen minutes longer and rub all through a sieve. Return to the fire, add salt and pepper to season, two lumps of sugar, a pinch of dry mustard, and one cupful of thin cream. Simmer for ten minutes, take from the fire and stir in the yolks of four eggs beaten, with one-half cupful of cream.

Apple Puffs.—Chop four sour apples very fine, stir them into one-fourth of a cupful of molasses, one beaten egg, a cupful and a half of corn meal sifted, one-half teaspoonful of salt; dissolve one-half teaspoonful of soda in warm water, add the above mixture, with enough water to make a batter. Bake in buttered cups in a quick oven.

Orange Ice Cream.—Scald a pint of milk in a double boiler, add two tablespoonfuls of flour blended with a little milk, cook twenty minutes. Add three well-beaten eggs, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, the grated rind of two oranges. Stir, cook carefully, strain. Chill and add one pint of cream and one cupful of orange juice. Freeze as usual.

Grape Juice Sherbet.—Take a pint of well-sweetened grape juice, a tablespoonful of lemon juice, and a pint of rich milk. Freeze as usual. Serve with the meat course.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

The Practice Of Citizenship

In lands where Christianity is most active democracy is also most advanced. This suggests there is a direct relation between the spirit of Christianity and the principles of democracy. This truth is significant, but there is another fact just as significant. It is that Christians living in a democratic state have a great opportunity to influence the course of government and to make the principles of Christ felt in civil affairs. Several of the things that are implied in the practice of citizenship by people of good-will are well worth considering.

THE PLACE OF THE STATE IN HUMAN LIFE

There are four great institutions known to man which in some form are universal: the Family, the Church, the State, and the industrial Order. These four institutions cover the range of human life, and hold a direct relation to the progress of man. Each has its own mission, though they occupy much the same sphere. They all work together toward one common end. Each is a field for the expression of God's will, and each is an agency through which man seeks the Kingdom of God.

(1) The Family, "the Institute of the Affections," which Mazzini has called "The Soul's Fatherland," is the medium through which the person begins to be. It is the channel through which the stream of life flows on from generation to generation.

(2) The Church, "the Household of Faith," is the agency through which living influences are brought to bear upon the unfolding life. Through the Church man is brought to God and the human spirit is lifted up into fellowship with the Divine.

(3) The State. Man is a being of relationships. These relationships are natural to him and are a part of his very being. It is necessary that there be some agency that shall define these relations, that shall protect man, that shall establish justice, and promote the common security. What we call the state, "the Institute of Rights," is the agency through which these needs are met. The state is concerned with what we call the civil and political interests of man; it exists that it may secure these rights and that its authority may be employed in defending them. The state is the people organized in a political capacity to protect and promote their necessary civil and political life. The government of the state is the machinery through which the state does its work.

(4) The Industrfal Order. Man has certain constant and necessary needs, as food, clothing, a home, and fellowship. In the Lords Prayer we are taught to pray, "Give us day by day our daily bread." It is thus God's will that his people shall have necessary food. In a general way, the Industrial Order includes all of the factors that enter into the production, the transportation, and the distribution of life's necessities. It is thus the means God has designed whereby his children shall have their daily wants supplied.

THE CHRISTIAN IDEA OF THE STATE

The Old Testament. The Old Testament teaches that it was God's purpose to make of Israel a people for himself. He called these people out of Egypt and gave them a law for their guidance. The underlying idea of the Jewish legislation was the kingship of Jehovah. He was their lawgiver and the king; back of the nation was God; back of the law was the righteousness of the Eternal. Judges and kings were not regarded as sources of authority, but only as channels. The judges are charged to judge righteously, "For the judgment is God's."

The New Testament. The new Testament builds upon this conception and enlarges it. The Master gives little direct teaching on this subject, but his example is The Master paid his taxes; he obeyed the laws of the land. In this connection we have two striking sayings from his lips. One day he was surrounded by a crowd of people in the temple, when a scribe approached him with a cunning question, "Master, shall we pay tribute to Caesar, or shall we not? 'Bring me a penny," says the Master. "Whose image and superscription has it?" They say unto him, "Caesar's; and he replies, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." In this saying the Master charges each party to fulfil the other half of its duty, and, in this reply, he shows that the duty to government is equal to the duty of God.

The other incident is still more striking. He was on trial before Pilate, and the Roman finally asks, "Whence art thou?" That was not the question at issue, and Jesus gave him no answer. Pilate became irritated at the silence of Jesus, and said: "Speakest thou not unto me? Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and I have power to release thee?" The Roman thought of his power as something which he might use as his own will might dictate. Tne answer of Jesus is most significant, and is one of the most suggestive words he ever spoke: "Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above. Therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin.' The words imply that Pilate was there to represent the justice of God; that power which the Roman was about to use wrongfully has its source in that mysterious unseen world whence the Son of man had come. They remind Pilate that he is not free to follow his own will; and they are a searching appeal intended to remind the Roman that he is accountable to the King of all the earth. This truth, that the ruler was God's representative, was fundamental in Israel's life. Therefore, the Jewish leaders who believed that the ruler was God's representative on earth were guilty of most heinous sin in perverting government to suit their own evil ends. Government is a divine ordinance, and the ruler is to represent God's justice.

Second Air Course On Crops and Soils

A new course will start in M. A. C. radio extension school on March 16, when the two-weeks series of lectures on crops and soils subjects gets under way. The "air" course will start with hundreds definitely registered, and it is expected that a large percentage of Michigan's farmers will "listen in" on the talks during the two weeks period.

The first week of the course will be given over to the radio feature of the special "Better Seed" week which is being sponsored in the state by the farm crops department at M. A. C. The talks given over station WKAR at the college will be picked up by local groups throughout the state, gathered around receiving sets.

Among prominent farmers of the state who will appear on the "Better Seed" week radio programs along with crops specialists from the college, are Garfield Farley, of Calhoun County, president Michigan Crop Improvement Association; Paul Clement, Lenawee County, the state's leading seed corn grower; Ralph Arbogast, Branch Co., vice president of the Improvement Association; and I. R. Waterbury, editor of the Michigan Farmer.

Three other two weeks radio courses will follow the crops and soils course. They will be; Livestock and Poultry, March 30 to April 10; Home Gardens, April 13 to 24; and Homemakers, April 27 to May 8. Any radio listener can register for the courses, registration entitling him to outlines of the lectures and a certificate in the course.

New York Hens Win Winter Egg Contest

First honors for the winter cycle of the International Egg Laying contest being held at M. A. C. have been won by a pen of Rhode Island Reds, entered by the West Neck Poultry Farm, of Huntington, Long Island, New York. The New York birds produced 800 eggs during the four month period ending March 1, an average of 80 eggs each for the ten hens in the pen.

Second place at the end of the winter stretch of the contest went to a pen of Barred Rocks, entered by F. E. Fogel of East Lansing, Mich. White Leghorns, entered by the Royal Hatchery, Zeeland Michigan stood third.

Michigan Potatoes Staging Come Back

Michigan potatoes have staged a come back on the principal consuming markets of the county. The 1924 crop regained much of the former prestige held by state tubers taking preference, with special reference to the reception of the Michigan crop, discriminated against in recent years on some markets.

"There is still a discount made on account of Michigan's recent reputation on the potato markets", says Weston, "the price offered per 150 pound bag being slightly less than that from such states as New York and Pennsylvania. This reputation, however, can be completely recovered by continuance of the better producing practices which have been started in the state, and by continuing the compulsory grading work which was put into operation by the State Department of Agriculture in 1923.

"There is generally an improved feeling and sentiment among the trade for Michigan potatoes this year."

Michigan Professors Experiment With Earth Houses

Earth as a building material for houses has made a good showing in tests conducted by Professors F. N. Menefee and R. E. Franklin of the College of Engineering of the University of Michigan. Already through their researches these men have discovered that earth can be so treated and tamped as to give a rigidity capable of maintaining more than 50 times the weight of the ordinary house. Prof. Franklin is having plans drawn for a rammed earth house.

Ordinary earth, with the exception of pure sand, which will not pack, and pure clay, which will crack, can be used in the construction of walls. The earth is treated so as to contain less than 10 percent of water. It is then tamped in forms and after drying it has an enormous strength, according to Prof. Menefee.

The process for the making of "rammed earth" involves no delay for drying. When the earth has been packed with the rammers until it rings against the iron, another layer can be packed on until the desired height is reached. A difficulty is seen by the experimenters in procurring a waterproof covering for such a house.

Rammed earth, or as it is called elsewhere "Pise de Terre" in a crude form was used to construct the first house in St. Augustine, Florida, the oldest city in the United States. It should be differentated from adobe and other such materials.

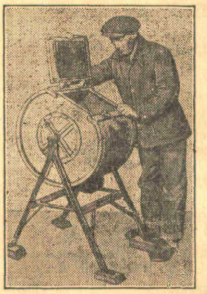
POWER ON THE FARM A NATIONAL BENEFIT

Rural Development Through Electricity Will Mean Secure Foundation for Country at Large.

By E. A. WHITE,

Director Committee on Relation of Electricity to Agriculture.

Up to this time electrical developments have been applied chiefly to urban conditions. The farmer has been watching this with wonder, amazement and appreciation—appreciation of the fact that the economic application of electric service to agriculture offers great possibilities for improving living conditions on the farm.



The Hired Man Gets Acquainted With the Electric Churn

And back of this lies the hope that it may be a real factor in reducing production costs.

Farm life has been changing in many respects during the past twenty-five years. Rural isolation is gone forever. Daily mail delivery, the telephone, the radio, the automobile and good roads have made it possible for the man on the farm to establish effective contact with the rest of the world.

This contact has been so well established, in fact, that, largely for economic reasons, approximately two million persons left the farms in 1922. About 800,000 of this loss was offset by the movement of urban population to the farm.

LIGHT FOR HENS IS RATED HIGH

After Ten-Year Study of Subject, Cornell University Endorses Idea With Enthusiasm

POSSIBLE VALUE IS GREAT

Prof. James E. Rice, head of the poultry department at Cornell University, sums up the result of a ten year investigation of artificial illumination in hen houses in these words:

"I would no more think of undertaking to handle poultry in this latitude without artificial light than I would undertake to keep house without this modern convenience."

Basing his views on many experiments and a thorough practical analysis of the subject, Prof. Rice added that he did not sympathize with the view that artificial illumination injured the birds by producing an unnatural condition. "We are firmly convinced," he said, "that an exceedingly important factor in overcoming the unnatural conditions to which fowls are subjected during our short late fall and winter days is the practice of lengthening the days by artificial light.

Proper Use Essential

"This has proved remarkably effective in causing an increase in egg production during fall and winter—which is the best possible reason why this potent ally of the winter egg producer should be used with caution and in accordance with the physical condition of the fowls."

Careful inquiry into methods on farms where artificial illumination has not proved satisfactory has convinced Cornell University poultry authorities that in these cases the lights have not been properly used. It is declared that the most important single factor in the matter is that of holding the rate of production within the hen's natural laying capacity.

Reasons for Failures

Prof. Rice says that experience proves conclusively how easy it is to hold the percentage of egg production within certain limits for an indefinite period by the proper use of lights, which increase or decrease the hens' working day. But some poultrymen, finding it possible to boost their egg yield from 50 to 70 per cent, give their hens a sixteen or eighteen hour working day, and thereby invariably put the birds out of condition.

Colds That Hang on

If you permit a cold to fasten itself upon you at this season of the year it may last all winter, and of course may develop into a very much more serious illness.

If you begin to treat a cold just as soon as it appears, it is much easier to get rid of it.

If the treatment that you use is Father John's Medicine you will find that the cold promptly disappears in the natural way because this prescription gives strength and enables the organs of the body to perform their natural functions, drives out the poisonous waste matter and restores normal health.

FATHER JOHN'S MEDICINE

Invention of Great Value

A chemical product resembling glass and useful for many of the same purposes recently was perfected by Fritz Pollak, a German inventor, says Popular Science Monthly. It can be rolled, bored, polished or cut, without the tendency to splinter that glass has. Because of this quality it is useful especially for automobile windows, optical instruments, ornaments and toilet articles. The inventor arrived at this product by condensing carbamide and theocarbamide with formaldehyde.

Some friendliness arises from setting too high a standard for friendship.

Made Many Wealthy, and Died in Poverty

It was in 1843 that Charles Goodyear, Yankee inventor, accidentally discovered the secret of vulcanization. The accident consisted of dropping a mixture of rubber and sulphur on a hot stove in his home. Today, says the India Rubber Review, vulcanized rubber literally holds up the stockings and trousers of the world. More than 15,000,000 motorists ride on it. More than 50,000,000 person walk on it daily. Infants cut their teeth on it and old age uses it for false teeth. Balloons and dirigibles of rubber float aloft, while submarines plow beneath the ocean surfaces, propelled by electricity stored in rubber cells. Yet Charles Goodyear was pauperized by expensive lawsuits instituted to protect his 60 different patents which were awarded him after years of struggle, and he was deprived of the fruits of his discovery through a technical irregularity in the registration in France and England of his patents. He spent his last days in humble circumstances.

Everything in existence deteriorates.

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

REDUCE TAXES, SAYS COOLIDGE ON INAUGURAL

President Dedicates Self and Administration to Lightening Tax Burden.

Washington.—Clothed with a direct mandate from the people, Calvin Coolidge dedicated himself and his administration to the lightening of the tax burden at home and to the promotion of peace through mutual understandings with the nations of the world.

These two purposes were outlined by Mr. Coolidge in his inaugural address, delivered from a simply decorated stand at the east entrance of the Capitol just after he had taken his second oath of office as President of the United States.

Text of Inaugural Address.

Following is the text of President Coolidge's inaugural address:

My Countrymen: No one can contemplate current conditions without finding much that is satisfactory and still more that is encouraging.

Our own country is leading the world in the general readjustment to the results of the great conflict. Many of its burdens will bear heavily upon us for years and the secondary and indirect effects we must expect to experience for some time. But we are beginning to comprehend more definitely what course should be pursued, what remedies ought to be applied, what actions should be clearly manifesting a determined will faithfully and conscientiously to adopt these methods of relief.

Already we have sufficiently rearranged our domestic affairs so that confidence has returned, business has revived, and we appear to be entering an era of prosperity which is gradually reaching into every part of the nation. Realizing that we cannot live unto ourselves alone, we have contributed of our resources and our counsel to the relief of the suffering and the settlement of the disputes among the European nations. Because of what America is and what America has done, a firmer courage, a higher hope, inspires the heart of all humanity.

We stand at the opening of the 150th year since our national consciousness first asserted itself by unmistakable action with an array of force.

Birth of the Nation.

The old sentiment of detached and dependent colonies disappeared in the new sentiment of a united and independent nation. Men began to discard the narrow confines of a local charter for the broader opportunities of a National Constitution. Under the eternal urge of freedom we became an independent nation.

We made freedom a birthright. We We extended our domain over distant islands in order to safeguard our own interests and accepted the consequent obligations to bestow justice and liberty upon less favored peoples.

In the defense of our own ideals and in the general cause of liberty we entered the great war. When victory had been fully secured, we withdrew to our own shores, unrecompensed save in the consciousness of duty done.

First of All American.

Throughout all these experiences, we have enlarged our freedom, we have strengthened our independence.

We have been, and propose to be, more and more American.

But if we wish to continue to be distinctively American, we must continue to make that term comprehensive enough to embrace the legitimate desires of a civilized and enlightened people determined in all their relations to pursue a conscientious and religious life.

Forces for Defense.

The physical configuration of the earth has separated us from all of the old world, but the common brotherhood of man, the highest law of all our being, has united us by inseparable bonds with all humanity.

Our country represents nothing but peaceful intentions toward all the earth, but it ought not to fail to maintain such a military force as comports with the dignity and security of a great people. It ought to be a balanced force, intensely modern, capable of defense by sea and land, beneath the surface and in the air. But it should be so conducted that all the world may see in it, not a menace, but an instrument of security and peace.

In common with other nations, it is now more determined than ever to promote peace through friendliness and good will, through mutual understandings and mutual forbearance.

Policy of Disarmament.

We have never practiced the policy of competitive armaments. We have recently committed ourselves by covenants with the other great nations to a limitation of our sea power. As one result of this, our navy ranks larger, in comparison, than it ever did before.

Removing the burden of expense and jealousy, which must always accrue from a keen rivalry, is one of the most effective methods of diminishing that unreasonable hysteria and misunderstanding which are the most potent means of fomenting war.

This policy represents a new departure in the world. It is a thought, an ideal, which has led to an entirely new line of action. It will not be easy to maintain. Some never moved from their position, some are constantly slipping back to the old ways of thought and the old action of seizing a musket and relying on force.

America has taken the lead in this new direction, and that lead America must continue to hold. If we expect others to rely on our fairness and justice, we must show that we rely on their fairness and justice.

Has Faith in Parleys.

If we are to judge by past experience, there is much to be hoped for in international relations from frequent conferences and consultations.

I am strongly in favor of a continuation of this policy, whenever conditions are such that there is even a promise that practical and favorable results might be secured.

We cannot barter away our independence or our sovereignty, but we ought to engage in no refinements of logic, no sophistries, and no subterfuges to argue away the undoubted duty of this country by reason of the might of its numbers, the power of its resources, and its position of leadership in the world, actively and comprehensively to signify its approval and to bear its full share of the responsibility of a candid and disinterested attempt at the establishment of a tribunal for the administration of even-handed justice between nation and nation.

The weight of our enormous influence must be cast upon the side of a reign, not of force, but of law, and trial, not by battle, but by reason.

Peace will come when there is realization that only under a reign of law, based on righteousness and supported by the religious conviction of the brotherhood of man, can there be any hope of a complete and satisfying life. Parchment will fail, the sword will fail; it is only the spiritual nature of man that can be triumphant.

It seems altogether probable that we can contribute most to these important objects by maintaining our position of political detachment and independence.

While we can look with a great deal of pleasure upon what we have done abroad, we must remember that our continued success in that direction depends upon what we do at home.

No one would deny that there should be full and free expression and an opportunity for independence of action within the party. There is no salvation in a narrow and bigoted partisanship. But if there is to be responsible party government, the party label must be something more than a mere device for securing office.

Hits Party Disloyalty.

Common honesty and good faith with the people who support a party at the polls require that party, when it enters office, to assume the control of that portion of the government to which it has been elected. Any other course is bad faith and a violation of the party pledges.

This administration has come into power with a very clear and definite mandate from the people. The expression of the popular will in favor of maintaining our constitutional guaranties was overwhelming and decisive.

There was a manifestation of such faith in the integrity of the courts that we can consider that issue rejected for some time to come.

Likewise, the policy of public ownership of railroads and certain electric utilities met with unmistakable defeat.

The people declared that they wanted their rights to have, not a political, but a judicial, determination, and their independence and freedom continued and supported by having the ownership and control of their property, not in the government, but in their own hands. As they always do when they have a fair chance, the people demonstrated that they are sound and are determined to have a sound government.

When we turn from what was rejected to inquire what was accepted, the policy that stands out with the greatest clearness is that of economy in public expenditure with reduction and reform of taxation.

The principle involved in this effort is that of conservation. The resources of this country are almost beyond computation. No mind can comprehend them. But the cost of our combined governments is likewise almost beyond definition.

Not only those who are now making their tax returns, but those who meet the enhanced cost of existence in their monthly bills, know by hard experience what this great burden is and what it does. No matter what others may want, these people want a drastic economy. They are opposed to waste. They know that extravagance lengthens the hours and diminishes the rewards of their labor.

I favor the policy of economy, not because I wish to save money, but because I wish to save people. The men and women of this country who toil are the ones who bear the cost of the government. Every dollar that we carelessly waste means that their life will be so much the more meager. Every dollar that we prudently save means that their life will be so much the more abundant. Economy is idealism in its most practical form.

America's Problem Simple.

If extravagance were not reflected in taxation, and through taxation both directly and indirectly injuriously affecting the people, it would not be of so much consequence. The wisest and soundest method of solving our tax problem is through economy.

Fortunately, of all the great nations this country is best in a position to adopt that simple remedy. We do not any longer need wartime revenues. The collection of any taxes which are not absolutely required, which do not beyond reasonable doubt contribute to the public welfare, is only a species of legalized larceny.

Under this republic, the rewards of industry belong to those who earn them. The only constitutional tax is the tax which ministers to public necessity.

The property of the country belongs to the people of the country. Their title is absolute. They do not support any privileged class; they do not need to maintain great military forces; they ought not to be burdened with a great array of public employees. They are not required to make any contribution to government expenditures except that which they voluntarily assess upon themselves through the action of their own representatives.

Whenever taxes become burdensome a remedy can be applied by the people; but if they do not act for themselves, no one can be very successful in acting for them.

Further Tax Reduction.

The time is ariving when we can have further tax reduction, when, unless we wish to hamper the people in their right to earn a living, we must have tax reform.

The method of raising revenue ought not to impede the transaction of business; it ought to encourage it.

I am opposed to extremely high rates, because they produce little or no revenue, because they are bad for the country, and, finally, because they are wrong.

We cannot finance the country, we cannot improve social conditions, through any system of injustice, even if we attempt to inflict it upon the rich. Those who suffer the most harm will be the poor.

This country believes in prosperity. It is absurd to suppose that it is envious of those who are already prosperous.

The wise and correct course to follow in taxation and all other economic legislation is, not to destroy those who have already secured success, but to create conditions under which everyone will have a better chance to be successful.

The verdict of the country has been given on this question. That verdict stands. We shall do well to heed it.

Moral Issues Involved.

These questions involve moral issues. We need not concern ourselves much about the rights of property if we will faithfully observe the rights of persons. Under our institutions, their rights are supreme.

It is not property, but the right to hold property, both great and small, which our Constitution guarantees. All owners of property are charged with a service. These rights and duties have been revealed, through the conscience of society, to have a divine sanction.

The very stability of our society rests upon production and conservation. For individuals or for governments to waste and squander their resources is to deny these rights and disregard these obligations. The result of economic dissipation to a nation is always moral decay.

These policies of better international understandings, greater economy and lower taxes have contributed largely to peaceful and prosperous industrial relations.

Under the helpful influence of restrictive immigration and a protective tariff, employment is plentiful, the rate of pay is high, and wage earners are in a state of contentment seldom before seen. Our transportation systems have been gradually recovering and have been able to meet all the requirements of the service. Agriculture has been very slow in reviving, but the price of cereals at last indicates that the day of its deliverance is at hand.

Nation's Chief Problem.

We are not without our problems, but our most important problem is, not to secure new advantages, but to maintain those which we already possess.

Our system of government, made up of three separate and independent departments; our divided sovereignty, composed of nation and state; the matchless wisdom that is enshrined in our Constitution—all these need constant efforts and tireless vigilance for their protection and support.

In a republic, the first rule for the guidance of the citizen is obedience to law. Under a despotism, the law may be imposed upon the subject. He has no voice in its making, no influence in its administration, it does not represent him. Under a free government, the citizen makes his own laws, chooses his own administrators, which do represent him.

The essence of a republic is representative government. Our congress represents the people and the states. In all legislative affairs it is the natural collaborator with the President. In spite of all that criticism which often falls to its lot, I do not hesitate to say that there is no more independent and effective legislative body in the world. It is, and should be, jealous of its prerogative. I welcome its co-operation, and expect to share with it, not only the responsibility, but the credit, for our common effort to secure beneficial legislation.

These are some of the principles which America represents. We have not by any means put them fully into practice, but we have strongly signified our belief in them.

America seeks no earthly empire built on blood and force. No ambition, no temptation, lures her to thought of foreign dominions.

The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the cross. The higher state to which she seeks the allegiance of all mankind is not of human, but of divine origin. She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God.

First to Declare Coolidge Presidential Possibility

Washington.—When President Coolidge took the oath of office on March 4, near at hand was a man, a little under medium height, rather portly, and slightly gray, who was thinking, even though not saying: "I told you so."

That man was Frank W. Stearns, friend, counselor and ardent supporter of Mr. Coolidge. He sometimes is described as the one who "discovered" Mr. Coolidge.

Mr. Stearns is a Boston merchant and makes no pretense of being a politician. Yet he was the first to predict that some day Calvin Coolidge would sit in the White House, and Wednesday was the day of days for the Boston man, because he saw not only a prediction, but a dream come true when Mr. Coolidge became President by vote of the American people.

It was at Frank Stearns' urging that Mr. Coolidge became a candidate for lieutenant governor. It was with Frank Stearns' aid that he was elected governor. It was Frank Stearns who backed the move to obtain the Republican Presidential nomination for Mr. Coolidge in 1920. That move failed, but it won the Massachusetts governor the vice presidential nomination. His election with Warren G. Harding followed, and Mr. Harding's death made him President. And in the recent preconvention and election campaign the Boston man had a quiet but, the campaign managers say, a not inconsiderable part.

ARE you lame and stiff; tired and nervous—constantly troubled with backache and twinges of pain?

Have you given any attention to your kidneys? Grip, colds and chills, you know, are apt to be mighty hard on the kidneys. And if the overtaxed kidneys fail to properly filter the blood, impurities accumulate and throw the whole system out of tune. Then may follow daily backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying kidney irregularities.

In such conditions a good stimulant diuretic should help the kidneys flush the poisons out of your system. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have helped thousands. Are recommended by folks you know. Ask your neighbor!

Last Saturday Mrs. Emma Relyea received a box of oranges and grape fruit, which was sent from Pass-a-Grille Florida by her daughter Anna who has been spending the winter there.

Prof. Hemp of Albion College English Department was called here by the State Anti Saloon League on Sunday morning in accordance with their regular program of supplying churches in the district with speakers. The remarks of Prof. Hemp were clean cut and contained no acrimonious slurs as do some of the speeches delivered against liquor. Hearers were surprised to learn that the government placed the embargo on liquors in this country in the World war time not specifically because of the evils of intemperance but for saving the precious grains like wheat, barley and rye which were annually going into the breweries to come out in the form of liquid hell. The army needed the wheat, hence the embargo, but after trying out the stunt it was found so tremendously successful as a temperance measure the Anti Saloon League had comparatively smooth sailing to put into effect the Volstead and other dry laws. Prof. Hemp recalled the days of limitation of coal and flour supplies, when a man's supply of these articles was limited to thirty days only. He told how he had bought the season's supply of coal and had the mortification of seeing the trucks back up to the cellar door and take the fuel for the use of Uncle Sam when at the same time the breweries of the conntry were burning millions of tons of black diamonds each and every day. He pleaded for a saner consideration and less criticism of the officers of the law whose duties often led them into the jaws of sure death. The awful disregard of bootleggers for human life today appeals to every right thinking man and we should as a rule respect the law's officials who often show the highest tyes of human grit and bravery in pursuing the booze toters. Prof. Hemp thinks the dry officials as a rule are far better than they are credited for, for it takes nerve and manhood to go up against a real desperate hooch peddler armed to the teeth and not afraid to shoot. Prof. Hemp warned his listeners that finances as well as pep were essentials in keeping up the tirade on liquor, and he especially called attention to the wonderful array of legal talent whice the "wets" have on their list including the magnificient and most capable lawyer in America, Elihu Root formerly of the president's cabinet, backed by untold millions of money. He asked us to consider for a moment what the temperance element had to offset such a stupendous array of talent. He answered "Nothing" but the contributions of thousands of good people who wish the country dry. He quoted the episode of Hon. Ex-Secretary of State Hughes who turned down a princely sum rather than stand as the "wets" attorney and cited few sacrifices equal to it. Altogether the talk on Sunday morning at the Congregational church could not be other than an uplift to the minions of temperance.

10 lbs. more! per cow – per day

Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

1—Tsuneo Matsudaira, new Japanese ambassador, who says he brings message of peace and friendship. 2—Glimpse of U. S. fleet at practice off California coast, preliminary to test of safety of our naval base in Hawaiian islands. 3—Dr. William M. Jardine, being sworn in as secretary of agriculture.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Matsudaira Talks Peace—Senate Rejects Warren—Jardine Appointed.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

TSUNEO MATSUDAIRA, the new Japanese ambassador to the United States, arrived in Washington Wednesday, "with gratitude in his heart" for the preliminary welcomes he had received at San Francisco and at Chicago. His official welcome at the capital will be no less warm, for he is distinctly persona grata to the United States government. He comes of a great historical family of Japan, as does his wife; speaks English well; was secretary general of the Japanese delegation to the Washington arms conference; has held several important diplomatic posts in Europe, and was vice minister of foreign affairs in the Japanese cabinet at the time of appointment. In short, he is of the new school of Japanese statesmen. The ambassador's unofficial words en route across America explain why he is welcome at the capital:

"I bring greetings from across the Pacific to the people of America. I have had a splendid welcome to your shores. I am come on a mission of peace. I consider it a duty and a privilege to do all that I can to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the United States and Japan. There is no question or difference of opinion that is not capable of amicable settlement if approached in the spirit of friendship. If the press of both nations will confine itself to facts—that will help."

MATSUDAIRA'S temper of mind is appreciated at Washington. For as the new ambassador neared the Golden Gate he may have had glimpse of the great American fleet now practicing in the Pacific, preparatory to starting for the much-vexed Hawaiian maneuvers and a visit to Australia and New Zealand. And it will be remembered under what circumstances his predecessor, Masanao Hanihara, departed from Washington. It is also easy to recall that Japan at one time strenuously protested against our Pacific naval program for this summer.

The main point of the great mimic war in the Hawaiian islands between the attacking "Blue" fleet and the defending "Black" land forces is to decide whether the Island of Oahu, our naval base in the Pacific, can be defended against enemy attack. With Oahu in our possession, our Pacific coast is safe from enemy attack, from the military viewpoint. Oahu can be defended against enemy attack, provided its defense is supplemented by an American fleet in the Pacific. But suppose an emergency keeps our fleet in the Atlantic—that's another and different story. Hence the importance of the coming Hawaiian maneuvers. Hence the importance of a Japanese ambassador who does not necessarily read into this mimic war the inference that the hypothetical "enemy attack" is on the part of Japan and does not necessarily see in the "friendship visit" of the American fleet to Australia and New Zealand a combination and conspiracy against Japan by the English-speaking peoples of the Pacific.

DR. WILLIAM M. JARDINE has succeeded Howard M. Gore as secretary of agriculture. There is naturally nation-wide interest in the new Agriculture department head. If experience guarantees fitness, Secretary Jardine should approximate 100 per cent efficiency. He has first-hand knowledge of agriculture and has a practical background based on experience as cowboy, dairy farmer, ranch manager and man of affairs. At the same time his scientific attainments are large. When appointed he was head of the Kansas State Agricultural college.

Washington gossip has it that Secretary Jardine will stage a shakeup in the department. His public utterances would indicate that he holds views harmonious with those of President Coolidge on the solution of the problems of the farmer. In 1924 he was opposed to the McNary-Haugen price fixing bill.

The vast army of national park enthusiasts is anxiously awaiting a statement by the new secretary of his policy as to the efforts of the forest service of the Agriculture department to wrest the control of the national parks from the national park service of the Interior department. The thousands promoting the adoption of a national forestry policy and program also are eager for a statement.

THE struggle in the senate over confirmation of the President's nomination of Charles B. Warren to be attorney general is still on at this writing. It is a lively fight, with surprising features. Tuesday, while Vice President Dawes was "peacefully snoozing" at his hotel, the senate approached a tie vote. A desperate effort was made to get Vice President Dawes there in time to break it. As Dawes entered the chamber, Overman of North Carolina, the only Democrat who had voted for Warren, dramatically switched his vote. This destroyed the tie of 40 to 40, cinched Warren's defeat and made the automobile rush of Dawes more or less ridiculous. Whereupon the senate—at least the anti-Warren senators, if no others—gave Dawes the "ha, ha!" They had got even with him for reading the riot act to them March 4.

President Coolidge Thursday surprised everyone, including the party leaders, by again sending the nomination of Warren to the senate. It was not made public whether the President had determined to force the fight or had acted in order to give Warren an opportunity to defend himself against senate charges. Incidentally, the Michigan house of representatives Wednesday endorsed Warren, as a reply to the statement of Couzens that nine-tenths of the people of that state were backing his opposition to the confirmation.

A late statement issued by Secretary Sanders at the White House was this: "At the request of the President Mr. Warren consented to allow his name to be presented again to the senate." Officials would not enlarge on the announcement, but some senators were of the opinion that Mr. Coolidge desired to assume full responsibility and draw a direct issue between himself and the senate on the question.

THE emphatic utterance by President Coolidge in his inaugural address as to the necessity of party loyalty and regularity suits the regular Republicans in both house and senate. The respective committees on committees have cleaned up in accordance therewith. The house demoted followers of LaFollette on important committees. The senate, after long and bitter debate, in which the opposition was led by Borah of Idaho and Norris of Nebraska, demoted LaFollette senators, the whole slate being approved by a vote of 64 to 11. The test vote, 36 to 13, was on the effort of the opposition to substitute Ladd of North Dakota, a LaFollette follower, for Stanfield of Oregon as chairman of the public lands committee. Most of the Democrats here declined to mix in the party quarrel and voted "present." So the insurgents are placed at the bottom of the lists in accordance with the numerical strength of their followers.

APPORTIONMENT of funds amounting to $2,500,000, appropriated by congress for the construction of improved roads and trails in the various national parks and national monuments, is announced by the Interior department. The Interior department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1926 contains an appropriation of $1,500,000 to be expended for the building of these much-needed roads and trails in the national parks and monuments under the jurisdiction of the national parks service. An initial appropriation of $1,000,000 for this road and trail work was made available in the deficiency act which was signed by the President December 5, 1924, making in all $2,500,000 available. These appropriations were made under authority of the National Park Highways act of April 9, 1924, which authorized the appropriation of $7,500,000 for the carrying out of a three-year road and trail construction program.

Of the $2,500,000 fund appropriated the sum of $453,000 has been allotted to Glacier National park, Montana, of which $410,000 is to be spent on the Transmountain road. This road is being built across the Continental Divide and when completed will be the first means of access through the park from the east side to the west by motor car.

In the Yosemite National park, California, $404,000, the next largest allotment, will be expended. Approximately half of these funds will be used in paving the El Portal road from the park boundary to Yosemite Village, connecting with the all-year highway which the state is building to El Portal and which is expected to double the automobile travel into Yosemite. The sum of $235,000 has been allotted to Mount Rainier National park and $166,000 has been allotted for road work in the Grand Canyon National park. The $140,500 allotted to Rocky Mountain National park, Colorado, will be divided between six different projects, all of them important. The famous Fall River road, the highest road in the national park system, reaching an altitude of 11,797 feet on the top of Rocky mountain, and the High drive from Fall River to Moraine park will get the larger share of these funds.

BARON AGO VON MALTZAN, the new German ambassador, was officially welcomed Thursday by President Coolidge. The new representative of Germany thanked the President for the work of American citizens in the economic and financial reconstruction of his country.

"I gratefully recall the generous activities of American citizens in social and cultural help, and the farseeing work of financial and economic reconstruction, bearing an American name which has become historical," he said.

"The last order of the deceased president of the reich was to express to you, Mr. President, his feeling of high personal esteem and his sincere wish for the welfare of the United States of America."

"It is for you to interpret to America the just aspirations of your nation," said President Coolidge in reply. "It is for you to promote the understanding which is the only sound basis of lasting peace. We have had a long history as a republic, and we hope that you may profit by a study of our experience of a century and a half of democratic government."

BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM MITCHELL, storm center of the controversy over air power as a national defense, will be succeeded April 27 by Lieut. Col. James E. Fechet as assistant chief of the army air service. Colonel Fechet is now in command of the air service flying school at Kelly Field, Texas. The appointment is said to be satisfactory to both Maj. Gen. Mason N. Patrick, air service chief, and Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, chief of staff, though he has not publicly indicated his stand in the controversy. General Mitchell says that his efforts to secure a unified air service, distinct from both army and navy, will be continued. Incidentally Representative Florian Lampert of Wisconsin, chairman of the house committee on aircraft, issued a statement Wednesday that the investigation had vindicated the position taken by General Mitchell.

DR. WALTER SIMONS Thursday took the oath of President of the German republic before the various diplomatic corps and members of the reichstag in the reichstag. Doctor Simons will hold the office until the elections name a new chief. All attempts to bring about a coalition of the right parties failed with the refusal of the People's party to back Herr Gessler's candidacy for the presidency. Herr Stresemann's objections, based on the fears of foreign opinion, were supported by his party. Germany goes into the election campaign with five candidates, none of whom seems able to secure the election on the first ballot.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, arbiter in the historic Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru which has threatened the peace of South America for a generation, announced his decision Wednesday that the ultimate disposition of the contested provinces must be by popular vote. This is a preliminary victory for Chile. The decision fixes the conditions of the plebiscite and provides for a commission of three, of which the American member is to be president.

Simple Plan to End Grade Auto Crashes

Tallahassee, Fla.—The Florida state road department has devised a simple and inexpensive device that promises to cut down railroad grade crossing accidents. One already is in use as an experiment and the department plans to build others in its road-construction program.

The device is located on State Road No. 1 at Cottondale, where the highway crosses the Atlanta & St. Andrews Bay railroad. It consists of two parkways, one on either side of the railroad, inclosed by a concrete curb which divides the travel, causing the motorist going in one direction to pass on the right side of the parkway, while traffic in the opposite direction goes to the left.

One section of the curb begins 70 feet from the end of the railroad ties on either side of the railroad, and is constructed along the center line of the highway to the end of the ties. Another section begins at the same point and is constructed in an arc of a circle on the right of the center of the highway, and intersects the first section of the curb 20 feet from the end of the ties. The curve is sufficient to make it necessary to slow down to get through.

A sign designating the railroad crossing and giving warning to go slow is placed in the parkways at the extreme ends away from the railway as a warning during the day, and a red reflector is used at the same location as a warning at night.

Michigan Happenings

Upon petition of the Yellow Coach Manufacturing company, one of many creditors, the Detroit United Railways have been placed in receivership. The defendents consented to the action. An ever-decreasing volume of business, with motorbus and general automobile competion daily becoming keener and the mounting cost of operation, are among the factors said to have contributed to a crisis in D. U. R. financial affairs. Assurance was given that the court proceedings would not interfere with defendent company's normal service.

Seven bandits, two of them armed with sawed-off shotguns, held up the Freedman Bros. jewelry store in Hamtramck, and escaped with jewelry valued at approximately $15,000. The bandits drove up to the store in a large touring car, and four of them entered, leaving three others on guard in front of the place. The thugs forced one of the brothers, Isadore Freedman, into a room in back of the store and stood guard over him, while the others rifled the show cases. He was alone in the store when they entered.

The story of a Russian baron who became a Nihilist and fled from his native land about 50 years ago, went on the stage in England and later came to America where he made and spent a fortune under an assumed name was revealed at St. James following the death of the mysterious "Dr. Protar." Friends of Dr. Protar on Beaver Island, where he had lived among fishermen and farmers for years without revealing his identity, established beyond doubt, that Dr. Protar was Baron Perrot, of Pletn, Russia.

Michigan's peach crop has nine lives like a cat. On three different occasions growers have reported the 1925 crop of buds threatened with extinction, yet the crop still lives. According to reports brought to the pre-spring convention of the Michigan State Horticultural Society at Traverse City, the prospects are good for a near normal production of peaches in Michigan. The prospects are much better han a year year ago, the growers declare.

"Your time isn't up until Saturday but you will have to get out; we haven't room for you." With those words, Sheriff William Smith, of the Kent County jail, released three prisoners whose time was not up for three days more. The jail, which had a capacity for only 95 prisoners had a total of 132 inmates and it reached the point where something had to be done and the sheriff said he did the only thing he now of, releasing some of the prisoners.

The city commission of Monroe decided to submit to a vote April 5 a proposition to bond the city for $22,000 for the purpose of building two four-foot dams in the River Raisin. These dams would be used to flush the river, carrying away debris and maintaining a clear channel. The ballot also will include a proposal to levy a tax not to exceed $2,500 for the maintenance of a city band.

The estate of Peter J. Slane, of Owosso, priest who died in a Coney Island hotel room leaving approximately $150,000, will probably be tied up for weeks, pending determination whether he was a resident of New York or Michigan. Probate Judge Matthew Bush said that auxiliary proceedings would probably be needed before the heirs could get their shares.

Trucks using state and county roads will be permitted to carry but half loads until further notice. The order has been issued by the State Highway Department which holds that the softening and shifting of earth under the roads and the frost leaving the cement are liable to weaken the roads.

A bomb placed in the office of the White Star moving picture theater, Joseph Campau avenue, Hamtramck, exploded at 4 a. m. and blew out the front of the theater. The explosion broke windows in the block. No one was seen putting the bomb in the building, and Hamtramck police could discover no reason for the effort to destroy the place. The theater is owned by M. A. Slipski, who lives at the rear of the theater, but who is at present out of town. The damage was estimated at $700.

From The Coast

Mrs. Emma Relyea recently handed us a copy of the "West Los Angeles News" published by J. W. Dallas. It is a small 4 page folder beautifully printed containing poetry and articles on current topics of the day well written. In the issue of March 7 appears some very creditable poetry written by Mrs, Paul Henricksen, formerly Miss Greening a neice of Mrs. Relyea's husband who has been a resident of California practically all her life. From her pen we copy the following article:

"True worth needs no introduction. From the time of creation its light has shon e forth, beckoning to humanity to come, as did the Star of Bethlehem that Chrismas night when it guided three wise men to a manger of a little babe.

Needing no ornaments to enhance its beauty, true worth is not decked with any superficialities, but in her own simplicity goes her way, unwilling to speak of her own capabilities. The world one day will awaken to the fact that a great person is living among them.

What is your worth? Is it true or false? Are you blowing your own horn, showing and telling what you can do? Maybe you are an artist, musician or a writer. Whenever you have an opportunity do you exhibit your paintings, or seat yourself at the piano to entertain your friends, or read some of your own compositions? True worth never forces herself on anyone, she waits to be invited.

Good Storage Saves Loss With Pyrotol

Pyrotol, the war salvage explosive being distributed to Michigan farmers at cost by the government through the M. A. C. and county agents, is just as sensitive to poor storage as commercial explosives, according to Larry Livingston, M. A. C. extension specialist, large losses in power resulting where care is not observed.

"Pyrotol should be stored in a dry, well ventilated place", says Livingston. It should never be stored where people are living, and the caps should never be stored in the same place with the Pyrotol. Farmers all over the state are securing Pyrotol for use in blasting stumps and rocks from fields.

Hillsdale Fair Takes Action

At a meeting of the County Agricultural Society held on Monday it was fully decided to build a three story building on the north-west eorner of the grounds for the use of the Woman's Congress and kindred organizations, and to serve as a dormitory for the Boy's and Girls's Clubs at Fair time. It is understood the building is to belong to people of the county in general, and will be open for all farm organization meetings. No definite estimate of the cost is given, but it is presumed the expense will be close to $15,000. First floor will be occupied in the rear by a spacious dining hall and kitchens, in front by executive offices of the Association, ticket office, etc. Second floor will contain an auditorium or assembly hall 50 x 96 feet, and a balcony 30 x 36 feet. Third floor will be modeled into a dormitory 50 x 150 feet. Work will be begun on this important issue of the Fair as soon as the weather is suitable. In addition to this the board decided to remove the base ball diamond from present location to the west side of the race track area in front of the Grand Stand. The admission price which was 35c last year, has been raised to 40c including automobile. This practically splits the price in two.

"Rattle his bones over the stones for he is a poor pauper whom nobody owns." Arthur Phelps, 59 years of age, died at the county infirmary Tuesday morning, having been an inmate since February only. Phelps was brought in by the supervisor of Ransom township, and up to date it has never been learned whence he came or whither he was bound, nor that he has any living relatives. It looks like the Potters Field for him.

Staunton, historic capitol of the old Virginia country, including Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, West Virginia and part of Michigan, and the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson, the battlefield of Newmarket, site of the proposed Shenandoah National Park in the Blue Ridge Mountains of song and story, and the scene of Sheridan's ride from Winchester. This city has the largest apple concentrate plants in the world and the finest public school system in the United States. She was captured 72 times during the Civil War and was the headquarters of the Shawnee Indians in Colonial times. Grottoes and caves, historic Alexandria and Mount Vernon, home of George Washington, Fredericksburg, the home of James Monroe and John Paul Jones, and where the immortal George was transformed into a Mason, and where the first balloon was successfully used in war. James town the first permanent English settlement in America 1609, and Fairfax Court House, the home of Lord Fairfax, ancestor of Washington, Arlington, the greatest National cemetery, where are buried many thousand war heroes and commanding generals. And so we might go on indefinitely, but space forbids. This trip will be taken in June this year, and is looked forward to with great pleasure by the members.

To Tell Of Alfalfa Value In Michigan

Michigan, already the leading alfalfa state east of the Mississippi will continue her drive for increased acreage of the important leguminous crop this spring. Special campaigns have been scheduled for April in Cass, Oceana, Mason, and Antrim counties by the extension division of the M. A. C.

The campaigns will be part of the Dairy Alfalfa drive which has reached more than half the counties of the state during the past few years, specialists from the M. A. C. crops and dairy departments putting on the work.

Better dairy standards and markedly increased alfalfa acreages, with resultant added returns for the farmers of the districts, have followed the Dairy Alfalfa campaigns.

The four counties to be reached by the campaigns next month and the dates are as follows: Cass, March 30 to April 3; Oceana, April 13 to 17; Mason, April 20 to 24; and Antrim, April 27 to May 1. Local county agricultural agents are arranging the detailed itinerary for the "barn" meetings which form the main feature of the campaigns.

Tom Johnson for Supt. of Public Instruction

Thomas E. Johnson, Superintendent of Public Instruction and candidate for reelection on April 6th next, has the confidence of the school people of Michigan. The reason for this confidence is not hard to find. When first appointed and then elected to office most of the school men of the state undoubtedly felt that he was first a politician and second a school man, but his record in office has been such that they feel today that he is first a school man and second a politician.

Whatever success he may have had as a politician is undoubtedly due to the fact that he genuinely likes people and that liking begets a liking in return. In fact his definition of politics probably covers a situation. To him the art of politics is merely the art of making friends and keeping them.

There is no question but that for the cause of education he works both in season and out of season. While it is not a common thing to do, nevertheless the various organizations of educators in the state have readily endorsed him not only for his work but also for his continuance in office.

One point which is often overlooked is that Mr. Johnson is constantly endeavoring to see that the people of Michigan get their money's worth in the dollars they spend for education. The law requires the Superintendent of Public Instruction to approve plans and specifications for buildings, but it is rare indeed that unnecessary expense is not cut out of buildings while they are being passed on by the department. Constantly Mr. Johnson and his associates are endeavoring to reduce expenditures particularly in the smaller high schools and the consolidated school His motto has always been that the people are entitled to everything possible for each tax dollar raised and expended. Most of the criticisms which have been raised against him and his work have come from those who were anxious to keep the burden from being placed on those who could really afford to carry it, all of which certainly entitles him to the support of those who are interested in the welfare of their children and at the same time believe that the progress that takes place should not be at the expense of a rash wastefulness.

It is easy to criticize and we Americans are prone to criticize our public officials. Certainly, however, many of the criticisms hurled at Mr. Johnson are of a nature and from sources which should not in any way militate against his support at the polls.

Soils Lab. Will Come To Farmers

The soils laboratory, with all its scientific equipment and its full staff of technical specialists, is going on the road. Starting on April 7, at Grass Lake, in Jackson County, a special train carrying laboratory equipment will get under way on its trip through nine counties of the southwestern part of the state.

The soils department of the M. A. C. is equipping the movable laboratory and will furnish the specialists to manage it during its two weeks tour. State railroads will transport the "special" over its itinerary.

Leading feature of the work of the "Soils Fertility Special," as the train will be called, will lie in testing for acidity of the soils of the territory through which the train passes. Farmers will bring soils samples to the train at its scheduled stops, and here will have them tested by the latest and most efficient methods known to soils science. One car is to be known as the "laboratory", work of this kind being done in it by the college men.

Another car of the train will be fitted up for a lecture and demonstration car, short talks being given at the meetings held at scheduled stops. Still another car will serve as the "business" car for the party on tour. G. M. Grantham and O. B. Price, extension specialists with the train all through, while other members of the college staff are to join it for a few days at a time. The counties to be covered in the itinerary are: Jackson, Calhoun, St. Joseph, Cass, Berrian, Van Buren, Branch, Kalamazoo and Eaton. The tour will end in Eaton county on April 21..

I donned a long prophetic robe, announcing as a seer, "There'll be an end to this old globe on groundhog day this year." I've read the works of Mother Goose, our doom is there proclaimed, and demolition will cut loose from the day I've named. So sell your homes to giddy crowds who laugh the truth to scorn, and dress yourself in snowy shrouds and wait the fateful morn. The day of doom went by unmarked by dire catastrophe and this old planet still is parked just where it used to be. LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

The Apostles. The teaching of the apostles on this subject is brief yet clear. Thus Paul declared that "The powers that be ordained of God." This does not mean that the particular ruler is in office by the will of God; but that government itself has a divine meaning. "Rulers are God's deacons unto men for good," he says; "they are sent for the punishment of evil doers and the praise of them that do well. For this cause we pay tribute; to this end we pray for all who are in authority." Again, Paul charges Christians to pray for all rulers, that we may live a quiet and orderly life. Peter charges Christians to be "subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for vengeance on evil doers and for praise to them that do well."

Summary. In summary this is what we find: the state is a divine institution and here in the will of God. The state is here to represent his justice and to safeguard the life of man. The state is a field for the expression of God's will. The state is a means through which men may co-operate in their search after justice. It is necessary for us to see the divine meaning of the state and to do everything in our power that it may achieve its divine end and may fulfill the divine purpose.

THE GOOD CITIZEN

The good citizen honors the mission of the state, and fulfils the obligations that are upon him. He realizes that he is a sovereign citizen, with a sovereign's responsibility, and he accepts his sovereignty and meets its obligations. A man's duties as a citizen are as sacred as any claims upon him. Many people miss the point of the Master's reply to the Pharisees and Herodians. "Is it lawful for us to give tribute to Caesar?" The Pharisees made much of their obligations to God but neglected their political duties. The Heriodians honored Herod, but had little interest in divine things. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." In this saying the Master places the duty to government as equal to the duty of God; and he charges each party to fulfil the other part of the duty. The good Christian is a good citizen. The neglectful citizen is a neglectful Christian.

The good citizen pays his taxes and obeys the laws. The state has a right to be, and so it has a right to proper support. Taxes are the just requirements made by the state upon its citizens for the prosecution of its work. Every person should pay according to his ability for the expenses of the government It is true that public money is often misspent and wasted. But for all that, every citizen receives a larger equivalent for the money paid in taxes than for any other money. Undoubtedly the present system of taxation may be greatly improved. In some places it sets a premium upon dishonesty and encourages perjury; it taxes lightly unimproved property; it allows land speculators to take the unearned increment; worse than all, it taxes thrift and improvement more heavily than speculation and idleness But all this is no reason why men should dodge their taxes. One can go into almost any community and find the most notorious abuses. He may find rich men, prominent society and church leaders, dodging taxes, concealing personal property and swearing falsely. This is a scandal and a crime. The man who dodges his honest taxes is a dishonest man. If any taxpayer feels that the present system is unjust, and we know that it is, he must agitate and vote to have the system changed. But so long as the present law stands, he is under obligation to be honest.

The good citizen votes at every opportunity. A vote is the register of one's convictions with respect to men and measures. Every man who has convictions is under obligation to register them. It is only in this way that intelligent conviction and Christian conscience can became effecti[illegible] in civil af[illegible]cise this duty of their citizenship. During a presidential campaign they may be interested, and a large proportion go to the polls. These same men are often neglectful in local and state elections. As a fact, it matters little who is President; but it matters much who is mayor. This is not all, but many citizens fail utterly to attend the primary election. It is here that issues are considered, platforms are made, and candidates are chosen. All in all, the primary is very much more important than the election itself. To fail to vote is to fail in one's duty. So long as intelligent men fail to vote at the primary and the general election they have only themselves to blame when bootleggers and grafters run the city.

The good citizen is intelligent, conscientious, and courageous. The fact that people are intelligent in a general way, in literature and history, does nnt mean that they are intelligent in their citizenship. A man may be well acquainted with current literature, but may know nothing about civic affairs or whether the city has a good police department. The sad fact is that few voters exercise any independence and judgment in political matters.

The good citizen maintains a continuous warfare against evil. In the world there are many evils, and many of these cannot be cured by state action. Yet the state can do much to destroy evil and maintain justice. We often hear it said, "You cannot make men good by law." Is that statement true? By a good law, well enforced, we can make vice and dishonesty dangerous and unprofitable, and can create a strong moral presumption in favor of virtue and honesty.

Capital Punishment Snowed Under

Our legislators at Lansing are under a considerable stress lately concerning the capital punishment law which should have been passed but went aft-a'gley again probably because somebody's wife put up an objection. Under the circumstances the law makers could do little else than cater to the public will. Evidently most of our legislators don't want men severely punished for their misdeeds prefering rather to treat the criminal as a condition rather than a crime. If crime is a disease the country is fast becoming diseased, and this highly contagious epidemic should be checked right speedily or we shall become a nation of consumptives—that is tuberculosed morally, and that is quite near the condition since the World War. What should cause men and women heretofore thought to be passably decent, to violate the United States laws as they do, is beyond comprehension. Insanity fostered by bad liquor in many cases is the prime mover in most of the murders throughout Michigan. Secondary and none the less important is the general freedom of fire arms among the younger classes. We have claimed since the responsibility of editing was shifted to our shoulders that nothing was more rotten than the present arms law, and we are ready to back it up today with statistics which will show how badly we are shot up with the weapon proposition. Every lad when he attains his majority has an urge to carry some kind of a destructive firearm and his liberties are scarcely ever interfered with. Pa and Ma evidently do not realize just what the consequences would be if their sons should get embroiled in a serious quarrel while armed, neither do they take into the case accidental discharges of weapons while the carriers are climbing fences or tramping over rough stretches of woodland ever searching for the last fugitive game which may remain alive.

Somewhere we heard the remark or read that the constitution of the U. S. specially forbid the abridgement of any citizens right to bear arms. If we read International law right this applies only to times of war, and it is accepted that some of the requirements of that old constitution need changing to suit the times. We could hardly expect statutes written one hundred years ago to fit the present day—they are obsolete.

This silly twaddle we hear about what that good old book, the Bible says concerning taking men's lives in reparation falls short of its mark and it is time we woke up to what the criminal class are doing for our state. It is not presumptuous to say that crime in Michigan has made us a bugaboo to visitors They learn about it long before they reach our borders and while here they are constantly in a state of alarm—not knowing how or when the blow may be struck. Over at Jackson we have an institution known as State Prison—but how much of a prison is it? Do any of our readers imagine that convicts in Jackson who behave fairly decent are under any particular indictment. We beg to say that incarceration in the penitentiary of Michigan means mostly a bonanza for the average criminal. His accomodations and his favors are usually so much better than he could supply himself with if outside at liberty, it is a wonder large numbers of crooks don't apply at the beginning of the winter season for lodging at the state prison!

We note our representative voted with the rabble—he went on record as being against capital punishment, which probably eases his conscience, but it goes a mighty short way toward adjusting our criminal conditions and furnishing a medicine for our patients whom it is supposed need a tonic. We need to go to China for a little toning up and study of their punishment system. Of course China is unfeeling and has exaggerated views of the seriousness of certain crimes but as Walter Raleigh said the ax is "sharp medicine but it cures all diseases". We have in mind one instance where the engineer of a railroad train carelessly ran through a narrow bridge at top speed ruining government aero planes loaded on cars cross-wise. He was taken out of the cab and beheaded beside his engine. Of course this is a relic of the dark ages but we are experiencing dark age crimes right now in Michigan. For instance the George Straub murder in Jackson and the recent disinterring of a human body and dismemberment are streaks of the dark ages way back there when men butchered for the sheer amusement of doing it—then why should we defer longer what cries to us from every mangled murdered body—capital punishment?

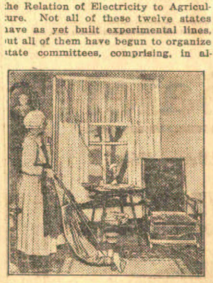
STEADY PROGRESS ON TRIAL LINES

Burdens Lifted in Sections Where Study of Electricity on the Farms Is Going On.

FINAL RESULTS COMING LATER

Much activity and study is in progress in all the twelve states in which the investigation of electricity on the farm is now going forward, under the general direction of the Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture. Not all of these twelve states have as yet built experimental lines, but all of them have begun to organize state committees, comprising, in almost every case, three co-operative elements—the farmers, the power companies and state educational institutions.



The Dust-Raising Broom Is No Longer Needed Here.

It will be a considerable time before it is definitely known from these investigations just how electricity can be applied to the farm so that both farmer and power company will find it a profitable proposition. In the two or three states where the study is most advanced, however, some incidental results are already cropping out, as indicated by what is given below.

Minnesota—Burdens Are Lifting

"I do my washing and ironing all in one day, where it used to take a day and a half, and half a day of my father's time," remarked a young woman on one of the electrified farms of Red Wing, Minn., to Prof. E. A. Stewart, of the University of Minnesota. Prof. Stewart, secretary of the state co-operative committee on the farm electrification project, is making regular visits to observe how the electrified farms are getting along in this section where the "barnyard laboratory" idea is in operation.

There is one farmer in that region who remarked when the electrical idea was first mentioned to him that he didn't know whether he wanted to fix up the house much. He wanted to get away to town. But he is staying now now, for electricity provides hot water for his bath, on tap at the tub, as well as water at the barn for his stock, cooks his meals and lights his whole farm at night.

NEW STATION KOA WILL SERVE FARMER

Successfully Opened at Denver, and Will Include Market News, Besides Entertainment

To the symbols WGY and KGO, which have crossed national borders to find a friendly welcome in many foreign lands, there has been added a third trinity of letters—KOA.

On December 15, KOA, the Rocky Mountain Station of the General Electric Company, at Denver, Colorado, projected its music and speech-laden waves on the air. The Denver station is the third link in the transcontinental chain of broadcasting stations. Its sister stations are WGY, at Schenectady, N. Y., and KGO, the Pacific Coast Station of the General Electric Company, at Oakland, Cal.

Towers and buildings of the new station are four miles east of Denver and command a hundred-mile sweep of the Rockies, from Pike's Peak at the south to Long's Peak at the north. Like KGO, at Oakland, the new station building, from foundation to roof, is designed and built for the sole purpose of radio broadcasting. The building stands between the antenna towers which are 260 feet apart and 150 feet high. Two connected structures house the studios and the power equipment.

KOA Has Two Studios

The first floor of the studio building is devoted to the offices of studio manager and staff, and reception room. The studios are on the second floor. The larger is forty-five feet long and twenty-two in width and is planned to accommodate large groups such as choruses and orchestras. In the smaller, separated from the main studio by the control room, solo numbers and addresses may be given. By the use of the auxiliary studio waits between numbers may be cut down.

In the control room, located between the two studios, operators handle the amplifying and the microphone equipment. In this spacious room are three stages ot speech amplifications, consisting of two 5-watt tubes and one 50-watt. A fourth stage is installed in the power house.

The transmission equipment of KOA embodies all the technical and mechanical improvements suggested by the experience gained at WGY and KGO. The antenna, of the multiple tuned type, consists of three silicon bronze wires, each of seven strands

Broad and Varied Schedule

The power house is a one-story building adjoining the studio building and is divided into a motor-generator room and the power room proper. Two sets of transmitting equipment have been installed either of which can be placed in service. The double equipment assures continuous operations should difficulties be encountered with one set during the broadcasting of a program.

"WHO'S THERE?"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place. Doctor Lancaster arrives. Joan accuses him of deceiving her, declaring her intention of leaving. He tells her he is the patient who needs her, saying he wants help in a "big fight," but makes no further explanation. She decides to stay. Evidently Doctor Lancaster is afraid of Myers. Joan discovers that the doctor is a victim of the morphine habit. Joan takes charge of him, helping him to overcome temporarily his craving for the drug. Myers accuses her of "meddling," but she refuses to leave or to give up her care of Lancaster. Mrs. Fraser, the matron, admits all at the institution are afraid of Myers, but will not say why. She begs Joan to "save the doctor." Joan in a measure succeeds in freeing Lancaster from his craving for drugs.

"It is not what Doctor Lancaster says," answered Joan. "It is what I say. Mrs. Fraser, please give me the storeroom key."

The woman, looking askance at Myers, let her hand slip down toward the bunch at her side.

"The key, please," repeated Joan, and received it. Quickly she locked the door and put the key in the pocket of her uniform.

"Now," she said, "I want you all to understand this situation. I am employed by Doctor Lancaster. I am under orders not to go until the month is ended. I am in charge of him. Until he is responsible for his actions I shall remain in charge, under Doctor Jenkins. Doctor Jenkins, is it your order that Doctor Lancaster is to receive a whole dose of morphine every few hours, of the amount he has been taking?"

"Why, Miss Wentworth, I never ordered that," protested Jenkins. "You see, Miss Wentworth—"

"Until you do," interposed Joan bluntly, "I shall continue the treatment as I learned it in Doctor Lancaster's hospital at Avonmouth. And if the storeroom is opened by anyone but myself I shall take legal action to protect Doctor Lancaster's interests."

"Miss Wentworth!" cried Myers, "you are making a tragedy where none exists. Nobody wants to harm the doctor. We all have one sole thought, to help him. Don't we, doctor?" he continued, addressing Lancaster.

"You are all—very kind to me," Lancaster mumbled.

"There, you see!" said Myers, turning toward Joan again. "There may exist differences of opinion," he continued in a facile manner, "and maybe I've expressed myself too forcibly. But we're all at one in wishing the doctor to get well as quickly as he can."

He was almost fawning now, but Joan remained inflexible. She knew that if she relaxed from the nervous tension that was upholding her she would become hysterical.

The group dispersed. Myers followed the girl out upon the veranda and stood for a long time near the door, watching her as she sat at the farther end, trying to compose herself. At last he came up to her.

"See here, Miss Wentworth," he began impetuously; "I've come to you twice and spoken fairly to you. Maybe you see now that you would have been wiser to have met me in the same spirit. Come, now, are we to work together as friends or not?"

"I have no objection," answered Joan, "but my duty concerns nobody but the doctor."

"You mean you won't co-operate with me in saving him from himself?" He looked at her with sullen challenge in his eyes.

"I do," said Joan.

Myers thrust his hands into his pockets. "Right!" he said. "Three times is enough. I understand. And that's the last you'll hear from me about it."

He went away, and Joan sat staring out across the darkening hills. How had she managed to fight this blind battle of hers to a successful issue? She did not know; but, whatever the hold might be that Myers had over Lancaster, she felt that Myers himself was in dread of its discovery.

Presently she saw the matron come cautiously out of the house and hurry toward her.

"How did you do it, Miss Wentworth?" she asked in awe. "You did what none of us would have dared to do—not me, nor Doctor Jenkins."

"Why not?" asked Joan. "Mrs. Fraser, of whom are you afraid? And Doctor Lancaster? It is not of that man Myers, whom he could send about his business at any time when he found strength of will. Who is it?"

"O, Miss Wentworth, I don't know," the matron sobbed. "But save the doctor! O, do save the doctor from that man who is trying to kill him!"

Chapter VII

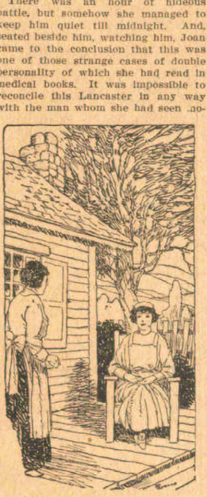
Joan had had supper with Lancaster, and it was night, and once more the fight was raging.

She had sat on the veranda with him, had talked with him, had seen the better soul of the man rise to the surface as he struggled with the morphine devil; then she had given him his half dose again, and, as his strength revived and the agony departed, she had seen the facile, lying spirit enter into him.

He was lying, wrapped in his dressing gown, upon his bed, and she sat at his side, at grips with the devil in him that clamored for its victim's body, that it might possess it entirely, as surely a devil as any spirit of evil, though its shrine was a little glass bottle holding a few drops of fluid.

She was fighting for Lancaster, fighting for the better Lancaster again, and he was writhing in torment and pleading with her to go, to leave him to his fate, since the suffering was intolerable and subjection preferable.

There was an hour of hideous battle, but somehow she managed to keep him quiet till midnight. And, seated beside him, watching him, Joan came to the conclusion that this was one of those strange cases of double personality of which she had read in medical books. It was impossible to reconcile this Lancaster in any way with the man whom she had seen momentarily at the hospital, and with the tyrant of the operating room. For that man was essentially base and ignoble, and this man was honor and truth, when the morphine fiend retired, baffled for a space, and under that pitiful load of shame she sensed the cleanness of the man's soul and its integrity.



"How Did You Do It, Miss Wentworth?" She Asked in Awe.

Somehow she held his devil at bay until midnight, and then, with a second victory to his credit, he stretched out his arm for the hypodermic. Then Joan saw the look of contentment come into his face, heard the satisfied sigh—and there was the old Lancaster before her, shifty, furtive and false.

No, not altogether, for something of that victory remained with him, the promise of renewed manhood; the morphine devil was losing its grip. Ground had been won. It should never be ceded. Joan swore that as she watched by the bedside.

"Doctor Lancaster, you have promised me to sleep till six," she said. "Can I trust you?"

"How can you doubt my word, Miss Wentworth?" asked Lancaster, with an affectation of surprise. "Of course you can. You know, I am not a regular user of drugs. I have been overworked, and I took morphine to make me sleep, and somehow it got hold of me. I think I must be unusually susceptible to the drug."

The old lie of the stupid drug devil! But Joan had the storeroom key, and she knew that it would require a hammer or a.. to break down the strong door. And she would wake and hear him, and fight again as she had fought that morning.

"Then I am going to bed till six," she said.

"But, Miss Wentworth," he protested, "six hours is an impossibly long period. Every three hours is my time, and now that I am on half-doses—you remember what Jenkins said this morning. You must go slowly with a confirmed drug-user like myself.

"Stop! Don't listen to me!" he added suddenly. "You can trust me, Miss Wentworth. I'm going to fight this out, and win."

"You are winning," answered Joan, bending over him. "Don't forget that. Say 'I am winning' whenever the pain seems uncontrollable and your will seems gone. It won't last long. Doctor Lancaster, you are your own self at this moment, and nothing can harm you. Fight the good fight!"

He caught her hand and carried it to his lips. "Miss Wentworth, you are my good angel!" he cried. "I secured the services of an angel unawares," he added, looking at her with that pathetic humor which went straight to her heart. "I want to win for your sake. But why are you taking so much trouble for a worthless old fellow like me?"

"Don't flatter yourself that it is all for you, Doctor Lancaster. Perhaps I may want to save the most distinguished surgeon in the South."

At her words he started; he stared at her, and then fell back upon the pillow, hiding his face. Joan turned away. Again she had touched some hidden spring of memory; what it was she could not know, but it was evident that she had wounded him to the quick.

Perhaps it was the contrast between the office he held and the man he had become. Perhaps it was the knowledge of his secret bondage which had broken him down at last and driven him back to the institute and Myers.

"Miss Wentworth, I want you to lock my door and take away the key," he said. "I may have a secret supply somewhere."

"I don't think you have," answered Joan. "You have none in this room, have you?"

"No."

"I believe that. And, anyway, I am going to trust you. That is part of your fight. I am going to trust you till six."

He said good night in a low tone and turned away. Joan went up to her room. She lay down, but did not undress. She was afraid, and she admitted that she was afraid, and nothing but Lancaster's desperate need of her would have kept her an hour longer in the institute. But she was exhausted from the day, and soon she was asleep.

She slept that sleep which brings no recreation for the jaded body or the overwrought mind. All the while she was back with Lancaster in his room below, in spirit. She knew that, as he had said, the drug bondage was only the climax of his difficulties. What had there been that had wrecked the man? Jenkins' hint at stolen funds? Of one thing she was sure: Lancaster, sunken as he was, was incapable of dishonesty. No, she must have placed a wrong construction on Jenkins' words.

And in her sleep her brain went on puzzling over the problem. Only her body was quiescent, and it lay wearily in the bed like some chained captive.

But suddenly the urgent summons of the brain shook from it the trammels of sleep Joan listened intently, awake upon the instant, as some wild creature of the woods that senses danger. Somebody was coming along the corridor.

The footfalls were so soft and stealthy that she might have thought she was dreaming but for the sense of imminent danger, the knowledge of some malevolent design. The steps stopped and began again, the merest touches of sound against the silence of night, the lightest patter of bare feet outside the door.

Then the door began to open.

There was no moon, and the faint starlight outside only seemed to render darker the obscurity within. Yet, through the darkness Joan knew that a hand lay on the door jamb, and that a figure watched her across the room.

She leaped from her bed. "Who's there?" she called, in tones that seemed to shock the silence.

She could see nothing now, and she dared not turn aside to light her lamp. She knew that the figure was crouching somewhere. She heard the softest breathing, but could not locate it in the room. She felt the atmosphere of evil that surrounded her. She started to cross the room, groping, with arms outstretched. Then she found the intruder and flung herself upon it.

Her left hand closed about a wrist, supple and strong. Her right hand held another hand. They wrestled in the darkness, their bodies tense but motionless, only the hands and wrist muscles at strife. Not a sound came from their lips.

Joan thought it was a woman's hands she held. Her fingers sought the menace in the closed fists. The left hand of the intruder was empty; but in the right was a jagged piece of a broken tumbler that tinkled to the floor.

So a woman is the mystery! Now why is she so bent on revenge?

Main Road Lacking in Allurement of Byway

Even before the automobiles took over the main roads it was better to walk in the byways. Along the lesser roads people are not too hurried for a friendly greeting as they pass, and the very animals of the back country are less sophisticated—the horses and cattle look up from their pasture to gaze with frank interest at each passerby.

Then, coming from time to time across the quiet of the countryside, are sounds that men have always heard gladly—the far-off crowing, like a mellow bugle, of a barnyard king—the distant creak and rumble of a farmer's heavy wagon rolling on upon the hills.

But best of all are the moments of discovery: late afternoon, when the shadows are growing long, and the road, bending suddenly about a low hill facing toward the bay, comes out upon a wide view down a valley wooded with dark green pines—and then, beyond, a great stretch of fair water, deeply blue.

That is the allurement of the byways; quaintness is all about, and beauty lies in wait—perhaps around the next turning of the lane.—Collier's.

Health and good looks
— the reward of internal cleanliness.

IF YOU do not keep clean internally your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks and insomnia, each of which saps your health and vitality.

Avoid Laxatives—say Doctors

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Rev. Scott concluded his series of anti war sermons at the church Sunday. In one of the sermons the pastor said "one of the chief causes of war is the millionaires who want to make billionaires out of themselves" while in his last sermon, he declared "I will never take any part in any war as I would rather be sent to prison than to take part in war and be forced to murder other human beings." Mr. Scott is a fearless speaker similar to Rev. Dellinger a former pastor here, but of course truth is as nearly unwelcome in the modern world as it was in the days of Christ and more than one individual has been driven from American colleges and universities for exposing financial crookedness in high places. For example there was Mr. Eaton of the University of Michigan who was expelled because he published in the university paper, a review of John Kenneth Turner's book "Shall it be again?" None of the newspapers heard of the affair until three months later when the Detroit Free Press published the news for public perusal, but Mr. Eaton says that the Free Press did not tell the truth about the matter and thus we have an up to date example of the manner in which Big Business working through the big universities and the big newspapers stifles honest opinions and then prevents the public from understanding who manipulated the wires behind the screen.

The Womans Club met Monday March 16, at the home of Mrs. Addie Baker. Roll call was responded to by naming some noted woman. The meeting opened by the entire club singing "America The Beautiful" then the club collect was repeated by all the members. Mrs. Eva Wolcott read Elbert Hubbard's 'Message to Garcia" Mrs. Gladys Williams read a paper on "Chemistry in the home" The meeting closed with singing. Next meeting will be held Monday, April 6, at the home of Mrs. J. Jones.

John S. Evans, editor of the Coldwater Star comes right out and expresses his thoughts concerning the doings at both church and schools of his city. John has always spoke right out in open meeting against the immorality that seems to hover over Coldwaer. The booze, the tobacco, the dances, the lottery schemes and desecration of the Sabbath day. He hits all these with a sledge hammer and cares not where or whom it hits. Recently a school girl was hastened to the hospital where she gave birth to twins, one of them dying. John says this is the fruit of allowing public dancing in the public school. In the same issue of the paper is an occount of two students of their high school being arrested for stealing in Sturgis. He hits his own church, the Methodist, for allowing smoking in their parlor and other things that should not be allowed. John sticks to his text and hammers away and his hammering has surely did some good though it has made him bitter enemies—but this he cheerfully overlooks."—Camden Advance

Basket Ball Game

Green and White "bring home the Bacon" in the shape of the class D silver Consolation Cup, won in the final tilt, on the Ypsilanti Basket Ball court Saturday, when our team won from Dexter by a 33 and 29 score in hard fought game. Our team left for Ypsilanti Thursday noon, previous to their first game in class D, of the Southeastern District Basket Ball Tournament held at the State Normal on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week. The first game drawn was with St Mary's of Chelsea, the fastest team of the fifteen teams competing, the victory going to St Mary's by only two points. The next drawing, Friday morning, matched our team with Camden, a fast bunch from our own county, the score being 28 and 18 for North Adams Excitement waxed high among fans at both ends of the lines and by Friday afternoon when news came of the victory over springwells to the tune of 48 and 12 it began to look like a victory in the finals, when our team was matched with Dexter, winning by a score of 33 and 29. A clean team, both in morals and sportmanship, under the supervision of Coach Lamb and Supt. Young gives North Adams something to be proud of. These will probably be the last games of this season, and the last time that Wolcott, Lynch, Randolph and Westcott will play under the Green and White colors of our school. The game last Monday night here, with Montgomery furnishing the opposition resulted in a walk away for North Adams, both girls and boys, the score for the latter being 50 and 7.

"What Happened to Jones"

The great New York success "What Happened to Jones" will be staged at the North Adams Community Hall on a near future date by the Hillsdale City band under the direction of Merritt Green. This is a brilliant farcial comedy in which Mr. Green will have the star part and we remember him by reason of former successes in our village putting on local talent and directing plays here. His company of players have put on several theatricals at Hillsdale and there ought to be a good patronage as the first-class shows that have come to our burg have been scarce. Don't fail to learn the date and watch for further particulars.

More Highway Laws

The State Tinker Box at Lansing is still at work fabricating laws for motorists to break, and the latest we learn of is a measure to better guard the sixteen thousand railroad and interurban crossings in Michigan from serious accidents by reason of careless auto drivers. The Richardson bill provides that motorists must "stop, look and listen" before crossing any rail or interurban track. Failure to do this constitutes a felony, and God knows we have too many of these now. also a super-abundance of laws. But of course you must remember it is necessary for a representative to make his debut by introducing a bill of some kind, and it requires several weeks to run out the grist.

Candidly, there is a deplorable laxness on the part of auto drivers and the results of it are becoming more threatening each day but there is no use confusing the public with a maze of laws which cannot be enforced without a battalion of state police on the scene night and day, then there are other angles to the situation. The fire company and the ambulance are exceptions to the rule and in many cases physicians and police patrols would have to be exempted. Not long ago a driver at Jonesville crashed into a train at a crossing, and many times these insane fiends have crashed into and carried away the safety gates provided by the railroad companies. In view of this there is little to be gained by passing laws which would be a parody on the traffic officials.

Fire Bugs Tabooed

The editor of the Reading Hustler waxes tragic when he talks of the reputed fire bug at Pittsford. He evidently believes in making a Roman holiday out of such inebriates and this is how he expresses it: "A punishment meet for such a fiend would be to let him set fire to a small building and then throw him into the flames. This may sound barbarous but think of the poor dumb brutes he tortured without compassion." It seems that investigation so far has failed to disclose the fire bug, although Hillsdale county officers have put in considerable time also the State Fire Marshal and others, trying to solve the riddle. Clues point to some half insane klepto but if such is the case he must have a Jekyll-Hyde personality by which he becomes a sober law-adiding citizen by day, and at night takes on sulphur and brimstone. The last attributed to him, is the holocaust of the barn of Vern Vreland which burned Saturday night last with contents. 79 sheep, 3 cows and two horses were cremated.

—You will miss it if you don't hear the concert put on at the Methodist church next Wednesday evening, April 1st under the direction of Frank Perkins of Hillsdale with Prof. DeGreene as reader.

The "Thank Offering" meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was largely attended Sunday evening at the Methodist church and the Society wishes to thank those who contributed to the offering, which amounted to over twenty dollars.

Miss Sarah Frederick who has been attending the State Normal School at Ypsilanti, graduated from that institution on Thursday, March 26th. Her father, William Frederick, was in Ypsilanti this week attending the ceremonies and to bring her home.

William Seymour Combs of Moscow township has recently entered as a bankrupt and his creditors are notified that the meeting to adjust claims will be held at the office of Paul W. Chase attorney at law in Hillsdale on Friday April 3rd 1925 at nine o'clock in the forenoon Central Standard time.

Senator Bahorski is after the goats of gun-toters in Michigan and proposes to put the kibosh on them by a law which he has introduced into the senate in Lansing as follows: The weapons are divided into two classes. Class 1 includes metallic knuckles, hat pins over ten inches in length, knives, razors. Class No. 2 includes sling shots, blackjacks, billies, sand bags, bludgeons, daggers, dirks, stillettos, bombs, bomb-shells, pistols, revolvers or other fire arms. Penalty for carrying concealed weapons Class 1, fine of $100 and 90 days in jail. Class 2, prison term of not less than five nor more than ten years,. with usual allowances for first offense, in discretion of the court. If this bill becomes a law there will be considerable hustling to keep out of the lime-light we imagine. We hope the law will be put on the statute books.

The Poverty Social at the M. E. church on Wednesday evening was not largely attended but report says some of the costumes in evidence were certainly the limit for extravagence. Henry Porter easily carried off the palm for being the most bankrupt gentleman present, it was thought at one time necessary to tie several yards of binder twine around Henry in order to hold on what little he did wear. A short impromptu program was given as follows: Story told by Mrs. Henry Porter; recitation, Eleanor Fitzgerald; song, Herbert Wells; recitation Ethel Brewer; mouth organ solo, Harry Hill; recitation, Carrie Bryant. Uncle Henry had something that looked like a radio strapped on his back which upon investigation proved to be a real old fashioned accordian and he jerked a number of tunes out of his music box quicker than you could say "scat". After a potluck supper the small but jolly company frolicked a while and went home. It is rumored that the way taxes are increasing another year will find people dressed even poorer, and we shouldn't wonder if fig leaves would be in demand.

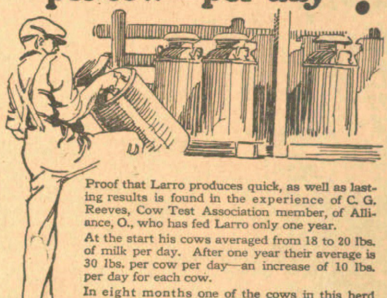
per cow—per day!



Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

Tells Why He Can Now Eat Hearty

"A letter which I read in the paper about Carter's Little Liver Pills fitted my own case so closely that I could not help trying them and am very happy I did." So writes Mr. Frank J. Trumbull of Jersey City, N. J., whose letter goes on to say, "I had heard about Carter's Little Liver Pills for years but never knew they helped overcome poor appetite and sour stomach, until I read about another man in the same plight who took Carter's with good results. I tried them and can honestly say that they freed me of nasty gas on stomach, so that I can now eat without getting bilious, and they improved my appetite fully 100%. You can rest assured that from now on I will boost Carter's Little Liver Pills whenever I can."

Straight Lines or Rounded Curves

I am not one of those who dislike the exaggeratedly slender and boyish figures of modern girls (it is so easy to admire what one does not have), and though I, myself, am of somewhat ampler proportions, I can only fancy that it must be glorious to have no weight whatever.

But I suspect it was less the men than the ladies themselves who introduced this exaggerated admiration for the extremely straight figure, instead of the rounded lines which from the time of the Greeks down—or is it up?—we have learned to regard as an element of true feminine beauty.

Sport, no doubt, has had a great deal to do with this, and it is quite true that the slender and pliant girl possesses an advantage over her rounded sister in polo, hockey, tennis, and the ultra-modern dances.

Obviously the juste milieu ought to be the ideal in everything, but how rarely it is attained! I think that we have gone a step too far in the modern direction, and that health—and, may I add, children—ought not to be sacrificed to an exaggerated curvelessness—if I may use the expression.—Marie, Presse, Vienna.

Tornado Kills 1,000 in Five States—Sargent Made Attorney General.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHILE spring poets are singing the beauties of Nature and voicing the annual "Call of the Wild," the gods of disaster are in the saddle all over the world.

Tuesday night an explosion—possibly caused by a bomb—wrecked Bethlehem mine No. 41 near Fairmount, W. Va., entombing 34 coal miners, who are presumably dead.

Wednesday Palm Beach, the popular Florida winter resort where thousands of Northerners are sojourning, had a narrow escape from destruction by fire. The famous Breakers hotel was among the buildings destroyed. The loss, including personal property of wealthy visitors, is about $4,000,000.

Wednesday fire in Tokyo, Japan, rendered 20,000 homeless and caused a loss estimated at $2,500,000. Fire in Fouradouro, Portugal, burned out 500 families. Torrential rains inundated Trujillo, the third most important city of Peru; the population abandoned their homes.

But by far the worst disaster is the tornado that swept across a part of the Mississippi valley, exacting a horrifying toll in human lives and property in more than 25 cities and villages in five states.

WEDNESDAY'S tornado disaster is the worst in our history. The tornadoes of February 18, 1884, in the South, May 27, 1896, at St. Louis and vicinity and April 24, 1908, in Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama, took approximately 500 lives each. This time the death toll may run to 1,000 and the injured may number 3,000. The property loss is incalculable.

The tornado swooped out of the Ozark mountains upon Annapolis, Mo. Thence it cut a ruin path across southern Illinois and divided, one tornado continuing on half way across Indiana and the other turning off into Kentucky and Tennessee. Beginning at 1:30 p. m., it ran its course in six hours. Five communities in Missouri, fifteen in Illinois, five in Indiana and eleven in Kentucky and Tennessee have reported 823 dead and 2,990 injured. The loss was heaviest in Murphysboro, Ill., 210 dead; De Soto, Ill., 118; West Frankfort, Ill., 107; Parrish, Ill., 20; Griffin, Ind., 50, and Princeton, Ind., 20.

All the resources of modern civilization quickly went into relief measures. Chicago and St. Louis broadcast the calamity to millions within reaching distance of the devastated area. National Guards, doctors and nurses; food, fire engines, medical supplies and tents were started by train and automobile without delay. The American Red Cross got into action by wire from Washington. Hospitals were thrown open and emergency preparations made. Relief funds were announced by radio; response by wire was instant from all parts of the country. Illinois will appropriate $500,000.

JOHN GARIBALDI SARGENT'S nomination and confirmation Tuesday as attorney general brought to an end the contest between President Coolidge and the senate over the Executive's selection of Charles B. Warren of Michigan for the place.

Notwithstanding the senate's first rejection of Warren, the President sent back his name Thursday. Saturday, with debate still going, a statement was given out from the White House which in effect was this notice to the senate, "Confirm Warren or I will offer him a recess appointment the moment you adjourn." Conceive, if you can, the outraged dignity of the opposition senators and their fiery determination to protect the senate's constitutional right to "advise and confirm." Anyway, the senate, after an exciting debate Monday, again rejected Warren, this time by a majority of seven votes. Tuesday letters between the President and Warren were made public. The President reiterated his regard and his promise of a recess appointment. Warren expressed his appreciation and declined a recess appointment. Thereupon the President nominated Sargent. Few of the senators had ever heard of him. The senate confirmed the nomination without debate—without even a roll call—and adjourned Wednesday.

Attorney General Sargent is a close friend of the President. He lives at Ludlow, Vt. He is sixty-five years of age, over six feet tall and weighs 250 pounds. He is a Tufts college man. He was attorney general of Vermont from 1908 to 1912.

IS THERE a curse that follows certain fortunes? Is the old saying true that "Murder will out?" Or can murder be made safe? These questions are raised by the sensational "McClintock case" in Chicago.

In 1870 a rich Englishman of title died. His widow married William Hickling. She died at Ottawa, Ill. Her husband and heir married Sarah Gensler. Hickling died. The widow married William McClintock and died. In 1902 McClintock moved to Chicago and married Emma Nelson of Topeka, Kan. April 3, 1903, William Nelson McClintock was born. In 1905 William McClintock was killed by accident and William D. Shepherd and his wife went to live with the widow and her little son. In 1909 Mrs. McClintock died suddenly. She left her son Billy more than a million dollars, with the Shepherds in almost complete control of boy and fortune.

November 23, 1924, Billy fell ill of typhoid fever. December 1, his fiancee, Miss Isabelle Pope, took out a marriage license, but Shepherd prevented a marriage. December 5 Billy died, leaving Shepherd his heir, with instructions to provide for Miss Pope. December 24 Chief Justice Harry Olson of the Chicago Municipal court, whose brother, Dr. Oscar Olson, died suddenly three years ago after a visit from the Shepherds, had Billy's body disinterred for an autopsy. Shepherd cleared himself of suspicions. Judge Olson revived the case.

Today Shepherd and "Dr." Charles C. Faiman are under indictment, charged with the murder of Billy McClintock by inoculation with typhoid germs. Faiman has confessed that he furnished the germs to Shepherd. He himself was to receive $100,000. The indictment raises the possibility of Shepherd's being charged with the death of both Billy's mother and Doctor Olson. A complicated legal contest for the million-dollar estate is presumable, with Shepherd, seven cousins of Billy and Miss Pope as litigants.

MR. ERNST. I wish to know if there be any way under the rules of the senate whereby I can. . . call a fellow member a willful, malicious liar?

It was the senator from Kentucky who said it, last Saturday during debate on the investigation of the internal revenue bureau by the committee of which Couzens of Michigan is chairman and Ernst is a member. Incidentally Ernst had been defending the action of the treasury in making an additional assessment of approximately $11,000,000 against Couzens on his 1919 income tax because of profits on the sale of his Ford stock.

Ernest interrupted Glass of Virginia, who went charging across, demanding that the Kentucky senator "be specific." Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, stepped into the breach. Ernst was made to take his seat, and order was finally restored. Later Ernst was given a chance to withdraw his language and to say that he was referring to Couzens, not Glass. It seems that Ernst had failed to hear Couzens accusing him of being a spy in the committee for the treasury. When he found out about it, he erupted. Borah of Idaho took occasion to say, "It is a pathetic thing, a very pitiable thing, that we have reached a point here in the senate of the United States where we cannot discuss public questions without indulging in personalities."

AMERICA fought the Spanish-American war in 1898, signed the treaty of peace with Spain in 1899 and evacuated Cuba in 1902. All this left in doubt the status of the little Isle of Pines off the Cuban coast. In 1904 the State department made a treaty with Cuba, fixing the island as a Cuban possession. Every president since McKinley has approved that treaty; secretaries of state like Root and Hughes have urged its ratification. Last Friday the senate got around to a vote on it and ratified it, with only 14 opposing votes.

Had the senate come to a vote at any time during all those twenty years of dilly-dallying, the result would presumably have been the same. So slow a performance of an act of good faith has been a grave reproach to the United States. In all probability the senate's neglect to act has been a contributing factor in the lack of Latin American confidence in the justice and good faith of the United States.

ST. PATRICK'S day found Americans of Irish blood in the mood for celebrating and the festivities were nation-wide. The shamrock was much in evidence and the blackthorn conspicuous by absence. President William T. Cosgrave pointed out that the day found the Irish Free State mistress in her own house, with peace established from Malin Head to Cape Clear and from Dublin to Galway. Her people, he said, had begun to realize that disagreement of Irishmen must be settled by methods of civilized and constitutional customs. The Irish nation had never been more confident of the future.

EVIDENTLY the lot of the star of professional baseball is not entirely "hard work and no play." Anyway, the accompanying photograph from the spring training grounds of the New York Giants at Sarasota, Fla., would seem to suggest something to that effect. It shows six happily-married Giants and their wives who see that the sulphur and molasses is taken regularly. The photographer is evidently a married man, since "ladies first" is his motto. From left to right the couples are: Mrs. and Mr. Groh, Mrs. and Mr. Frisch, Mrs. and Mr. Ryan, Mrs. and Mr. Meusel, Mrs. and Mr. Wilson and Mrs. and Mr. Crump. The fan needs no introduction to the first four "Misters"; the last two are "rookies" who may some day astonish the baseball world and draw down even more money than Captain Frisch.

TWENTY-FOUR organizations have held this week in Chicago, the "All Out o' Doors Annual Nature Exhibit." Its purpose is to foster outdoor recreation, and to interest the public in nature study and in the conservation of plant and animal life. "Good Manners Out of Doors" was the subject of general discussion at the annual luncheon.

This exhibit is important. Many varieties of wild flowers are doomed to extinction unless the American people can be educated to mend their ways. Outdoor recreation is being promoted by many thousands of good Americans who see in it the best antidote for the manifold ills of a civilization too strenuous and complex to be sane and safe.

And our out-of-doors manners are unbelievably and increasingly bad. They are so bad, indeed, that unless they are greatly improved property owners in many parts of the scenic West are likely to establish shotgun quarantine and the camping automobile tourists will be herded into auto camps under police regulation.

DEAD as a doornail is apparently the "protocol of arbitration and security" of the League of Nations. Austen Chamberlain announced its rejection by the British government. M. Briand defended it. Doctor Benes of Czecho-Slovakia proposed that it be referred to the next League assembly in September. This was done. It is the capital's belief that President Coolidge will call a second arms conference for next fall in Washington in advance of the League assembly. It seems to be the general opinion that France will accept an invitation to attend, provided the problem of French security has been solved—which is a problem for European nations rather than for the proposed arms conference.

DR. EDWARD BENES, foreign minister of Czecho-Slovakia, Tuesday proposed to Premier Herriot of France the creation of a United States of Europe, divided into two eastern and western groups.

Marquis Curzon of Keddleston, lord president of the council, and British statesman, died Friday aged sixty-six. His first wife was Mary Victoria Leiter of Chicago.

Jacob Gould Schurman, minister to China, was named Tuesday by the President to be ambassador to Germany.

Elderly Men Chosen to Rule University

Oxford, England.—The Twentieth-century fashion of raising young men to high places has as yet found no champions in Oxford. The average age of the present heads of colleges is just under seventy years, despite a number of recent elections.

A master once lived to somewhat over one hundred, and several heads who are now well on in the eighties are ambitious of bettering his record.

The duties of an Oxford college head are neither onerous nor agitating. He personally admits all new undergraduates into his college, invites them to breakfast once a year, and besides that sees very little of them. Heads of colleges are not called upon to teach or to lecture, they do not speak at Rotary club lunches, or indulge in frenzied financing campaigns.

But these men who have so little to do in managing their respective colleges, have everything to do in the administration of the university.

Meeting in solemn conclave, called "convocation," they transact university business, choose proctors and elect one another in turn to the office of vice chancellor, an office filled annually, analogous to the presidency of a great American university.

The headship of a college is a life job. The average age of the present heads at the time of their selection was a little more than fifty years. Older and older men are being selected, most of the recently elected heads having passed sixty years of age.

Corn Production of Country Falling Off

Corn production in the United States is not keeping pace with the annual increase in population, according to figures released by the United States Department of Agriculture. Total crop production has increased 13 per cent during the last twelve years, but production per capita has decreased about 5 per cent, figures the Agricultural Review.

The mass of crop production in 1924 as measured by an index number is 113 per cent of the average for the five-year period of 1910-14, and in 1923 the figure was 110 per cent. The index of crop production per capita in 1924 is 95 per cent of the average for the five-year period, and in 1923 the index figure was 94 per cent.

There was a decrease of about one-fifth of 1 per cent in acreage of crops from 1923 to 1924, but production in this period increased 1 per cent. The trend of crop production per capita has been lagging since about 1915, with the exception of 1920, the department says.

American Fur Farmers

It is estimated that approximately 12,000 fur farmers are engaged in the production of one or more species of fur-bearing animals in the United States and Alaska. The majority of them, however, are raising silver and blue foxes. The total investment in the business is somewhere between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000.

Michigan Happenings

The storm which swept Middle West March 18, killing hundreds of persons in Illinois, Missouri and Indiana, delat Michigan a severe blow although reports from the storm area indicated that there had been no loss of life. Michigan's storm center was in the west-central and southwestern sections of the state. Heavy rains early in the evening were followed by a slight drop of temperature which brought a heavy wet snow and this was accompanied after midnight by high winds.

Following a special meeting of the Flint board of education, it was announced yesterday that when the two new junior high schools, the Whittier and Emerson, costing $85,000 and $1,000,000 respectively, are opened next fall, they will not be large enough to hold the pupils whom they were designed to hold. Plans are being considered for the spending of $15,000 for the remodeling of the old Central high school to take care of the overflow.

Physicians were watching with interest the recovery of Mrs. Percy J. Hubbard, 42, of Tecumseh, who is convalescing after an attack of sleeping sickness. Mrs. Hubbard slept continuously for 24 days. Dr. P. B. Hardy reported that Mrs. Hubbard apparently was to escape all the usual after-effects of the strange malady. Her memory of events preceding her illness is slowly returning and she is regaining strength to walk about.

E. D. Weimann was elected for a fifth consecutive term as president of the village of Armada, Macomb county, it was announced at Mt. Clemens. Fewer than 150 votes were cast, with Joseph V. Palmerlee, Weimann's opponent on the Citizen's ticket, receiving 41 votes and Weimann 97. The People's Ticket was likewise successful at New Baltimore where Rudolph was named president.

Percy L. Hudson, a customer in the Epworth boulevard branch of the American State bank at Detroit, frustrated an attempted holdup at the possible cost of his life when he grappled with a bandit who had pressed a pistol against his side. The gunman fired, wounding Hudson in the chest. With his companion, the gunman then fled to his car, making no effort to rob the bank.

Fred T. Miles, of Holland, former Ottawa county prosecuting attorney, who was appointed to prosecute the charge of assault with intent to do great bodily harm against Sheriff Delbert Fortney, announced that the charge will be dismissed. No reason for this decision was given. The case was the result of Fortney's fistic attack upon former Mayor E. P. Stephan.

Pontiac hunters killed a good sized timber wolf on the Edsel Ford country estate in White Lake township, Oakland county. Wolf tracks had been noticed in the vicinity of the log cabin that Mr. Ford is building on a knoll on the large estate. With the assistance of dogs, the hunters chased a female wolf to its den and killed it without difficulty.

The Ann Arbor railroad has spent more than $2,000,000 in the last seven years for improvements, according to Owosso officials, in confirming a report that permission has been asked of the Interstate Commerce Commission to issue $1,000,000 six per cent notes, to pay for improvement already made.

Plans are under way by the Bible Holiness Seminary at Owosso to expand the two year junior college course now taught into a full four years course, it is announced by Charles Price, the principal. A building to cost $45,000 is being erected to provide increased facilities.

Charles B. Warren, Edsel B. Ford and Richard P. Joy are listed as the incorporators of the new Bank of Commerce of Springwells, which has filed articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State. It is capitalized for $100,000.

Driving their automobile into the path of an eastbound Michigan Central flyer, five Dowagiac youths met death and two others were critically injured when the train hurled the machine and its occupants 300 feet down the track.

The Board of Education has voted to sell $200,000 worth of school bonds to a Chicago bond house for the construction of a new school at Port Huron.

One man is dead and another is missing, following a fire that destroyed one of the cottages of the Newberry State hospital at Newberry. The charred body of John Crave, about 40 years old, who was sent to the hospital from Houghton county, was found in the ruins of the building.

Mrs. M. L. Burton, widow of the late president of the University of Michigan, will make Ann Arbor her home, she has announced.

Oakland county supervisors will convene at Pontiac March 27, to conclude the business of buying a site for a proposed county tuberculosis hospital. The hospital will probably be built in Waterford township.

Eight hundred Jackson prison inmates will be employed on the state highways this summer, according to plans announced by State Parole Commissioner Fred E. Janette. At present 200 are so employed in Washtenaw county.

Much Coffee Imported

Although the United States is not known as a great coffee-drinking country, as for instance England is known for its tea drinking, it is a fact that enormous quantities of coffee are imported into the United States annually. An average year's importations are 1,352,312,000 pounds, though of course some fair portion of this is exported again after having been blended and put up under brand names in fancy packages.

Tom Johnson for Supt. of Public Instruction

One of the men nominated in Detroit by the Republican State Convention, February 25th, was Thomas E. Johnson, who at once becomes a candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction. Probably no man exemplifies the personal history of the typical American better than does Tom Johnson.

Born in a pioneer Country in Canada, he came to Michigan when he was six years old and has continuously since been a resident of this state. His father, an itinerant Methodist minister, he found it necessary at an early date to begin to earn his own way in the world, and practically all that has come to him has been the result of strenuous personal effort.

In 1907 he was still some distance from graduation from the University, married, and the head of the school system at Stockbridge, Michigan. Twelve years later, with his college degree, he was Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of Michigan, a rapid rise and one of the type that appeals to American imagination, for at thirty six he was the youngest State Superintendent of Public Instruction in the United States.

Not only a school man but a man of wide interests he has always been an interested and active member of the various boards of which he is a member by virtue of his office. Since its inception he has been a member of the Administrative Board, where his vote and influence has always been in favor of the people in less favored communities.

In 1922 he aroused a good deal of antagonism by refusing to vote for the road program, insisting that the time had come when we must adopt a pay-as-you-go program, and suggested a gas tax as a part of the solution, being the first representative of the state government to come out and favor that form of highway finance.

When Mr. Johnson became a member of the board of auditors the new State Office Building had not yet been constructed, and at that time the state was at the mercy of many landlords in the City of Lansing. One of them insisted that he must have not only an advance in rent but a large payment of back rent or the department housed in his building would be forced to leave—obviously a great inconvenience to the state. The thing did not look right to Tom and he insisted that it was a form of blackmail and should not be paid. When the owner threatened eviction Tom stepped to the telephone, called the State Police and soon had a member of that organization on duty day and night in the office involved. Naturally they were not evicted, neither did they make any payments of back rent.

Communication From Rev. Frank Bross of Salt Lake City

Rev. Frank Bross of Salt Lake City who is as far as known the only Methodist minister serving as Deputy Sheriff, sent the following letter to his old friend, Rev. M. D. Carrell, at Lynn Haven, Florida and the latter submits it for publication, that people in this vicinity may know something of the life of the writer since going West. Rev. Bross is a brother of Mrs. H. G. Wells of this township and Mrs. Cora Hall of Sar Diego, California

"Salt Lake City, Utah, March 8, 1925. 1076 East Ninth South St.

The Rev. M. D. Carrell, D. D.
Lynn Haven, Florida.

My Dear Brother Carrell:-

It was both a surprise and delight to recieve your good letter of Jan. 31, and I thought I would surely write you that week, but my time is uncertain for other than work. I did not know your whereabouts and was so delighted to hear from you. On the 25th of January I thought of you so much and said to my wife that I would give much to see you, That was the 44th anniversary of the night when I bowed at the altar and surrendered myself to God. You have probably forgotten it, or at least the date, but I cannot. You were conducting the meetings in the M. E. church at North Adams, and Brother Shattuck, of the Congregational church was assisting you. I am glad to know that you have always thought of me as one of your boys, for so I considered myself. Your photograph is framed and hangs in my study, and has for many years. Had I known your location on Jan. 25th, I certainly should have written you. But not knowing I looked at your photograph and thanked God for your Christian influence over my life. The last time I saw you was in 1903 at the Annual Conference in Jackson, Michigan. I had come home to perform the marriage ceremony for Mina. You had previously made provision for me to take the charge at Boyne City Mich. but it seemed that my work was not yet done in the West, though it sometimes seems it would have been far better for me to have come. I had notified my Superintendent that I desired to leave after serving Rawlins, Wyoming for 3½ years and intended to spend a few weeks at the old home before coming to Boyne City. The Superintendent had arranged for a man from Indiana to take my place. But before I left Rawlins, the church at Laramie, the seat of the State University, phoned me to see if I would consider coming there to build a church and parsonage. Laramie was the second largest church in the State and by far the most important one. It seemed an opportunity for me to work with the students, and as they had asked for me the year before and the Superintendent urged me to go, I decided. The altitude was nearly 7200 feet. and I soon commenced to break, though I had a delightful pastorate there. Seven of the professors were members of my board two more taught in our Sunday school and the wives of two others were on the Official Board. This was more than one-half of the professors who were members of any church, also more than half of the students who attended any church services, attended ours.

This compelled me to study hard for sermon preparation, but that was good for me and I grew thereby. The church building program required so much hard work that much of my study had to be at night, which was not good for me, as I could find no time during the day for rest. Having sold the old church and parsonage, we were obliged to worship in a Lutheran church which we rented for two years. But despite those handicaps, our congregations and Sunday school grew, and our membership increased, especially from among the students. We also increased our Benevolences each year despite the heavy pull for Church Building funds. Bishop McCabe and Dr. Iliff dedicated our church which was then the finest one in Wyoming except Cheyenne, which was larger, but the art windows surpassed anything in Wyoming at that time. But the work had been too heavy for me, and after a good Revival in the Spring I arranged to exchange with a brother at St. Marys, Ohio, about 100 miles from Hillsdale. It was a church with 500 members.

It seemed an opportunity for me to enter a good conference at a lower altitude and thus prevent a breakdown. I had arranged to leave on May 1st. stop a short time in Omaha, and then in the old home in Mich. and take my Ohio charge on June 1st 1906. But God seemed otherwise minded, and on the 23rd of April, I broke. I had preached at both services the day before, though I think I had a slight stroke the Friday previous. At first the doctor pronounced it congestion of the brain, then congestion of the spine, but by Wed'y of that week he pronounced it meningitis and they did not think I would live from hour to hour. I rallied by Sunday and dictated a short message to be read at the morning service, but grew much worse that night. On Monday morning during the awful paroxisms of pain I suffered a stroke that left me helpless for several weeks. But God was good to me in answering the prayers of my church, and the home church at North Adams and of other places where I have served Also a faithful wife watched and prayed, and a skillful physician and nurse did all that human skill could do. By August I had sufficiently recovered that, at the suggestion of the doctor, I started on an overland camping trip to the Yellowstone, though I was unable to travel at times. But the outdoor life was beneficial and the freedom from work and responsibility greatly aided in my recovery.

However the break had been so serious that for seven years I was unable to go back into the pastorate. For six years I was sick nearly half of the time, but I ofden preached for others and helped where I could. I did some Institute when able, and worked in similiar lines, I came to Salt Lake on a business trip, and on the day that I was to have returned to Omaha they carried me out of a hotel to a hospital where I lay for five weeks with typhoid pneumonia. In five consultations of the doctors, y gave no hope for my recovery d wired my wife to come from Omaha But I recovered and the typhoid seemed to clear my system so that for seven years I did not have to call a physician. That was 12 years ago this spring, and by fall I had sufficiently recovered that I supplied a charge for four months until the new Pastor could be secured. I then planned to go to California the next fall, but was again asked to fill a charge for 3 or 4 Sundays until a new Pastor could be secured. I did so, but they kept me for three and one half years. My books had been packed for seven years and it seemed good to get back into the regular work. The work was easy, with only one service, at night, and helping in Sunday school in the morning.

Then I was called to the War Y. M. C. A. work as Religious Work Director at Fort Douglass Salt Lake, and later in the spruce work in Southwest Washington. Mrs. Bross went with me and I had charge of seven camps of soldiers, coming in with the last car-load of soldiers from the Spruce. I tarried in Oregon for a year of rest and change, and then was called to a charge in Salt Lake City, the third largest church in the state. I had a delightful pastorate here of three and one half years, during which time I was President of the Union Ministerial Association of the City and called upon for much outside work. But in the meantime, Mrs. Bross was stricken with blood poisoning caused by a pin prick on the right thumb. She was in the hospital nine and one half weeks, developing pleurisy that goes with the disease, and we worked hard to save her life. Her right hand is badly crippled and her health was broken for about two years, but she is spared and in fair health now. As my health began to break, and excessive blood pressure threatened a recurrence of the former sickness, and my wife's health and handicap made it wise to relieve her from the work of the pastorate. I accepted the appointment of State Superintendent of the Anti Saloon League for Utah. It is the only State where we had none and both Mormons and non-Mormons asked for my appointment. But after giving up my charge at Conference time and another man had been selected for that place, the A. S. L. backed out for fear of lack of financial support.

The Power Behind The Savings Dollar

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President American Bankers Association

A recent compilation made by the Savings Bank Division of the American Bankers Association showed that in the six years since the war our total savings deposits have risen from $11,600,000,000 to nearly $21,000,000,000, an increase of some $9,400,000,000. The total number of savings depositors is reported at about 38,900,000.

William E. Knox

The full significance of this is realized only when we visualize savings deposits as meaning much more than merely dollars in the banks. They really mean an increase in the accumulated productive capital of the country, since money deposited in the banks as savings is promptly applied by the bankers in the purchase of securities by which plant, railroad and other industrial development is made possible. These figures mean, therefore, that the small savings of many millions of people, instead of being frittered away in the purchase of goods that are immediately consumed, which involves a destruction of capital, are gathered together and applied in the better utilization of capital through the upbuilding of industrial equipment. This means the preservation and perpetuation of the country's physical wealth and its application to the production of further wealth more easily and in larger volume, resulting in a higher standard of living for all classes in the country.

These tremendous savings figures indicate sound habits of thought and practice on the part of millions of people in their personal economic affairs. This is an asset of no small value in appraising our present business outlook. It is, in fact, one of the most promising elements in the situation today. It means that we not only have the resources for prosperity, but also enough common sense to make good use of them.

FORCING LOWER TAXES

Gerard B. Winston, Undersecretary of the Treasury in the American Bankers Association Journal says, "The burden of taxes must be lightened. Per capita Federal taxes rose from $32 in 1918 to $54 in 1920; then commenced to drop, and have been successively $45, $32, $28, $29 in the last four fiscal years. It is estimated that for the next fiscal year the figure will be about $27. With the states and municipalities the opposite tendency is disclosed. In 1918 their per capita tax was something over $20. In the next four years it rose to $27, $30, $36, $38, and later figures will undoubtedly show further increases."

He says of excessive death taxes that "examples have been cited of how the states and Federal government, under existing laws, can take more than 100 per cent of an estate. If Federal and state governments take more than the particular source of taxation can stand, it will ultimately destroy all revenue from that source. After a man has provided for the reasonable requirements of living, the impetus to further production is largely the desire to leave one's family well provided for. So long as the individual feels that he can pay the tax and still leave an estate to his family, he will increase his efforts; but a man will not seek to build up a large fortune just to have it taken away from his family at his death."

STORE CREDIT COSTS 26 PER CENT

In a survey of 800 farms made by the North Carolina Experiment Station, it was found that over 40 per cent of the total credit needs for the farmer is for short term loans, either through the bank or through merchant advances. Only one-sixth of this amount comes from banks and the rest from stores or landlords. For store credit farmers are paying over 26 per cent interest, and only a little better than half of the farmers realized this fact. The bank rate of interest at the same time was only a trifle above 6 per cent. Practically all merchants would be delighted to go over to a cash basis.

The remedy lies in the production of more food and feed and in the discontinuance of shipping in hay and grain with their attendant high freight rates and dealers' profits. This means the establishment of better working relations between bankers and farmers, for there is great opportunity for educating the farmer along the line of bank credit.—Banker-Farmer.

UNDER NATURAL LAWS

Great changes are occurring in the agricultural situation. Gloom and grouch are giving way to renewed hope. We all rejoice that this is happening. It is being brought about through the immutable and inexorable natural laws. It is as difficult to legislate prosperity as to attempt by law to make folks honest. Agriculture in the last analysis operates under about the same basic laws as any other business.—P. B. Doty, Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association.

There are many evils in society that can be greatly reduced if not wholly cured, by state action. By good laws, well enforced, we can prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages; we can close up immoral disticts and reduce the social evil; we an close up gambling places and keep out filthy shows. It is the business of all right thinking people to maintain a warfare against all social evils. And yet, in every community a mass of evil exists, unopposed and unafraid, because no one has voiced any protest or organized any opposition. Wendell Phillips said one day "Place a hound in the path of a deer, and he will fly at its throat." May we not say, "Place a Christian in the presence of an evil, and he will spring at its heart It is the business of Christians to maintain an eternal warfare against everything that is evil and hurtful. They must never accept an evil as necessary. They must never allow any evil to remain undisturbed. They must never permit such things as saloons, slums, immoral houses, graft, or vote buying to become lawful and accepted institutions in their community. All this means struggle, opposition, trouble, cross-bearing. But then what is the Christian here for if not to oppose evil and destroy the works of the devil?

The good citizen respects and obeys law. It is axiomatic that every one should be law-abiding. He should respect the law and uphold it to the extent of his ability. Secretary Hughes said during his service as Governor of New York state, "The law-abiding citizen is he who obeys all laws, even those that affect him and which he may not like."

Laws have been made for the benefit of the people at large and therefore enter into the variety of human relationships. They are intended to curb questionable activities of some and to protect the rights of all and assist in the production of the best kind of community life. Without laws—a condition really inconceivable—there would be reversion to caveman life; there would be confusion and chaos and life would not be worth living. Laws are absolutely essential if we are to enjoy life at all.

The good citizen should take the ground that laws enacted are to be enforced. It is dangerous to permit any other point of view. The enforcement will show the character of the law, and we can commend the word of many magistrates, who, although not in sympathy with the prohibition law, declare that so long as it is on the books they intend to enforce it. It is bad practice to permit any law to become a dead letter. Better indeed have it enforced and proved to be obnoxious and then repealed, than to have it remain on the statutes of no effect.

He should do all within his power to assist those who have to administer and enforce the law. He can give them assistance by word of commendation, by assurance of co-operation, and by actively engaging in doing what he can within certain limits to see that the laws are enforced and that the officers of the law are doing their duty. It is stated that in the city of Rochester, New York, the religious forces have combined in the appointment of a committee of twenty five which has brought actual evidence of law violation before the grand jury. A co-operation of this character counts. And in line with this we should endeavor to have our magistrates impose jail sentences instead of fines. Every one of us should be eager to assist in every way the enforcement of law by being law-abiding himself, and by doing all he can to see that laws are properly enforced by those in authority.

The good citizen endeavors to promote justice in the state. Justice is one of the great words of Scripture. The Master pronounced a blessing upon those who "hunger and thirst after justice." The Son of Man, because he "loved justice and hated iniquity," is "accepted of God and anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows." Men are to be just themselves, and to seek after justice in the world. In every way possible they must seek for justice in the state. For the state is the agency in which all people can co-operate in their search after justice.

Justice signifies rightness, equity fairness, square dealing; to be just is to hold the balances even, to ask no more than one's fair share; to give to each his due, to treat others as one wants others to treat him.

Men with the ideals of justice must testify against all injustice, must withstand every wrong wherever they find it, must oppose every falsehood without fear or favor, must seek to ensure to each man his due. This means that the men of good will must make a collective effort to establish justice as the daily practice of the commercial world and to build up in the earth a just and Christian Industrial Order. That is, they must seek to secure for all men the conditions of a fair and human life in society; they must see that gains received and privileges enjoyed bear some proportion to service rendered and obligations fulfilled; they must put their faith and conscience in pledge in behalf of a just and Christian social order; and they must strive together to establish justice as the supreme law and the daily practice of all men in the relations of their lives.

Advancing Small Towns

"Our small towns are being reborn. Electrical power is doing it power, which Collier's has called the greatest of all servants of society. It is starting long idle factory wheels, building new plants bringing better roads, higher wages and a better way of life. High tension wires are putting the pleasant happy small town of American tradition on its feet to stay."

Commenting on that editorial, the Dixon Tribune says:

"Collier's is right. The small town is as well lighted as the city. It has the same advantageous power connection for manufacturing as as the city. There was a time when the mill or factory seeking to utilize water power had to build its wheels on the site of the stream today the mill may be two or three hundred miles away. Given advantageous shipping facilities, small towns are now attractive to manufacturers because of less valuable sites, cheaper rents and less temptations for employees."

One more thought should be added to the foregoing comment. Advocates of public ownership have been attempting to show that state or government development of electric utilities is necessary to give the people service. No more misleading or erroneous statement could be made. So called super power projects, which are glibly talked about by politicians are mere word phrases to catch the public fancy.

Long transmission lines stretching for hundreds of miles to small towns and farms far distant from the source of power, would be a fact today and in common use if private utilities had not perfected so called "super power systems" through interconnection of transmission line resources and development of great hydro electric and steam plants, long before the politicians ever invented the words "super power."

It is only fair to give the industry credit for what it has done and not allow the political advocates of government ownership of industry to misrepresent or minimize results which have already been accomplished.

What Became of J. Wilkes Booth?

There is scarcely a man woman or child in this country even to the most isolated cross roads, who has not heard of J. Wilkes Booth the notorious assassin of Abraham Lincoln in the days of the Civil War and it is even with feelings of horror and regret that we speak of this man whose crime and subsequent death electrified the world. Sometime ago the representatives of the Dearborn Independent Henry Ford's paper, were investigating the many rumors concerning the disposal of Lincoln's murderer and among other matters they were offered for the sum of one thousand dollars the mummified body of a man claimed to be J. Wilkes Booth A citizen of Tennessee owned the gruesome relic and he of course had its pedigree right up to the minute from the time Abraham Lincoln was shot. But so far as known all these rumors and claims concerning Booth are pure bunk, as history never lies, and the unmistakable and insurmountable evidence remains that J. Wilkes Booth after escaping from the theater in Washington, bent his course southward accompanied by confederates ninety miles below Washington. Here the Yankee troops cornered him in a barn and whatever may be said of him he certainly was a brave man for he fought the soldiers off and stood off a whole squad Finally unable to dislodge their quarry, they set fire to the building and while it was burning Sergeant Corbett, armed with a big navy revolver discovered the culprit and through a crack in the siding took careful aim and shot Booth but did not instantly kill him. Being disabled Booth was carried out only to expire in a few moments. Thus ended the career of one of the most famous murderers of modern times.

While it is by no means certain what became of Booth's body to this day, yet there died in Indiana a few weeks ago an army officer who claimed he was in the Government secret service at the time and that in pursuance of strict orders from the war derartment he assisted in the burial of Booth's body beneath the stone basement floor of a warehouse in one of the cities of the middle states, and that he had been instructed to keep the place a secret, and thought that just before death after a lapse of 60 years there could be no harm in disclosing the place of burial. He testified that the body was immersed in quicklime and no doubt soon disintegrated.

Studio Scene at KOA, General Electric Broadcasting Station at Denver

A thoroughly scientific study is in progress on the eight farms at Red Wing which are now fully electrified. This study will seek to establish the real economic basis on which electric service can be given the farmer so that it will be profitable to both him and the power company which provides it.

Alabama—Ten Lines Operating

The farm electrification study which is being made in Alabama is particularly extensive. The ten experimental transmission lines established to serve farmers are scattered all over the state and embrace all types of farming. Co-operation from the farmers has been readily obtained; in fact, the principal trouble has been to keep up with the farmers, who are reported to be anxious for electric service and pleased with the results.

Cotton raising, dairying, poultry raising, truck farming, general farming and small gardens are all represented in this farm electrification study. The number of farms on the different lines varies from two or three to as many as eighty in the more suburban communities.

A special investigation is going on at the Agricultural Experiment Station of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute as to the use of electricity in dishwashing, refrigeration, poultry raising, household work, fire-fighting, water-heating, hay-curing, sweet potato curing, tractor work and farm shop work.

market, produce, fruit and vegetable and livestock quotations as well as weather forecasts are read at 1 and 6 o'clock every day except Saturday and Sunday.

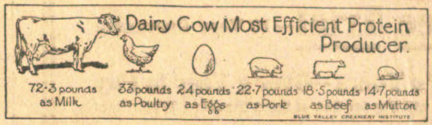
By the use of broadcasting pick-up circuits, KOA, like WGY and KGO, will be enabled to include programs, public addresses, church services, concerts, etc., which originate outside the studio. The new station as well as the other links in the chain are under the direction of Martin P. Rice, manager of broadcasting for the General Electric Company.

SURVEY SHOWS DRUDGERY OF MANY FARM CHORES

Conditions which electric service on American farms can be expected to abolish, or at least to reduce, are reflected in a survey recently made in four counties of central South Dakota by home demonstration agents of the State College Extension Bureau.

This survey revealed that a farmer's wife works fifteen hours a day in the summer and twelve hours a day in the winter. On 61 per cent of the farms covered in the survey, water was carried to the kitchen by hand On 87 per cent there were outdoor toilets. Oil lamps were the lighting system on 83 per cent. Only nine bath tubs were found on these farms And 88 per cent of the farmers had automobiles.

Dairy Cow Best Food Factory



THE cow is the most economical food factory in the animal kingdom. The hen, the hog, the beef steer, and the sheep cannot compete with her, according to the Blue Valley Creamery institute, basing their estimate upon the percentage of digestible protein produced by each from an acre of land.

Digestible animal proteins are the high quality protein of the human diet, the institute points out. These proteins are the determining factor in the trend of greatest economy of food production. With the annual increase in population the animal protein supply must be increased accordingly if future millions are to be properly nourished. To provide for this increasing need will be the work of the cow, the sow, and the hen, the three farm animals excelling in the production of digestible proteins.

As it fell, the other leaped at her as if strung upon wires. Joan saw, very dimly, the face of Mrs. Dana. She was in her nightdress, with her feet bare, and the ferocity of her attack seemed atrocious in contrast with the expressionless, masklike features. Only the eyes seemed alive, and they burned with implacable hatred, as if they meditated revenge for all the accumulation of a life's wrongs.

The woman bore Joan backward. The lamp fell crashing to the floor in a debacle of splintered glass. A chair was overturned. Mrs. Dana's hands sought Joan's throat, and they struggled in the darkness, crashing here and there, upsetting the water pitcher, smashing into the swinging door. Underneath her Joan heard Mrs. Fraser moving, and doors opening. There were steps on the stairs.

For a few moments Joan felt no match for the onset of the madwoman. But Mrs. Dana's impulse was soon exhausted. Joan got her arms about her body, pressing down the other's arms to her sides. Mrs. Dana suddenly became passive, and the lights in the eyes seemed to go out like extinguished candles as the brain clouded. Joan got the woman into the corridor. At the farther end a little lamp was burning.

Mrs. Dana went with her quietly, walking like a mechanical figure. At the head of the stairs appeared the matron, wearing a white wrapper. Behind her Joan saw the startled faces of Myers and Lancaster.

The girl led Mrs. Dana into her room, and Mrs. Fraser came at her heels, breathing hard in terror.

"Did she hurt you?" she gasped. "How did she get out? Who let her out? I should have told you she was dangerous, but I never dreamed that she could pick that lock. Did she—did she try to harm you?"

"She had a piece of glass," said Joan, "but I took it away from her."

"There was no glass in her room last evening," said the matron with conviction.

Lancaster was approaching. Joan was astounded to see the look of anger on his face. "Who opened that door?" he shouted.

"It's all right now, Doctor Lancaster," came the matron's voice from within.

But Lancaster was shaking with excitement. He swung round upon Myers.

"You are responsible for this!" he cried. "You know my one point that has to be carried out. I told you to have a bolt put on the door after she got out before."

"Now, now, doctor, don't excite yourself," said the secretary soothingly. "You're a sick man, you know. It was unfortunate, but I'll see it doesn't happen again."

Lancaster seemed beside himself with fury, far more angry, indeed, than the situation appeared to warrant.

"She might have killed Miss Wentworth!" he stormed. "I've stood enough from you without this. I've suffered you, God knows, until you've sapped my strength and crushed me under your feet, and made me less of a man than the meanest drunkard in Millville, but now it's ended. Get out of my sight! Leave the institute tomorrow!"

"Say," shouted Myers, "am I responsible if that woman got out of her room? What's the sense of picking on me? Didn't you hire a nurse to take care of your patients. Ain't Mrs. Dana a patient? Now there's been enough said, I reckon. You know what I mean, doctor. Better go back to your room and forget what you've said tonight."

"If ever I see your face after tonight, by G—d I'll kill you!" shouted Lancaster.

Myers slunk away toward the stairs. "O, all right, all right," he answered. "I reckon you'll be sorry tomorrow. But I'll hold you to what you've said. I ain't going to see that nurse bust up my work here."

He scowled fearfully at Joan as he went down the stairs, a grotesque, almost deformed figure in his loose pajamas. But Joan hardly heeded the man. She did not know the cause of Lancaster's sudden outbreak of rage, but she knew that it was part of the whole dreadful problem, and that, in fighting Lancaster's driving devil, she was at work upon the darkest corner of the dark mystery.

"I think, Doctor Lancaster, you had better go and lie down again," she said. "No harm has been done, but I am very sorry you were awakened."

He was leaning against the wall, looking at her with a strange expression upon his face. He breathed quickly, like a man in uncontrollable agitation. Just then the matron came out of Mrs. Dana's room.

"How did it happen, Mrs. Fraser?" asked Lancaster.

The matron snapped the key in the lock before answering. "I don't know, Doctor Lancaster," she answered. "The lock's all right. It couldn't have been picked. And I swear I locked it last night. Somebody must have let her out."

"That hound—!" began Lancaster, but Joan interposed. "She may have found a key," she said.

The matron shook her head. "No key would fit that lock, except the right one," she answered.

"Why should anyone tamper with that lock?" Lancaster muttered. Suddenly he broke down and covered his face with his hands. His shoulders shook convulsively. Joan put her hand on his arm.

"Doctor Lancaster, you must go back to your room now," she said. "It was nothing, and it is all ended."

"Miss Wentworth, if you will stay with me till six it will help me to master myself. It is not the wear of yielding to morphine; it is my thoughts. If you knew how one's life comes crowding upon one in the darkness—"

"I'll stay with you," said Joan.

"Let us wait on the veranda," said Lancaster. "The air is stifling in this house. Put on a wrap and I will wait for you there."

Joan ran upstairs and slipped on her cloak. When she got back Lancaster had not moved from the door. The secretary was packing noisily in his room.

They went outside together, closing the front door behind them, as if to shut in the evil influences in the place. There was a hint of morning in the air, in its freshness, in the paling of the night above the eastern mountains.

Lancaster led the way toward the chairs at the end of the veranda and wiped the dew from them with his handkerchief.

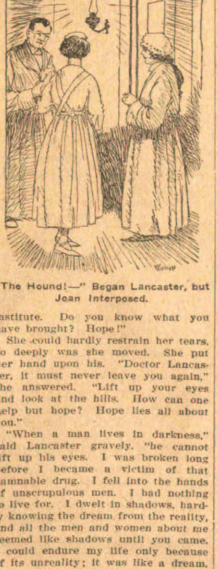
"When you came here," he said, as they sat down, "when on the impulse I asked you to come here, I did not dream that my impulse was the prompting of my good angel."

"You said I was your good angel," said Joan lightly.

"It was more than chance," said Lancaster seriously. "It was the happiest thing that has ever come to me."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am only too glad to have had the opportunity of being of service. It is what every nurse would have wished."

"No," he corrected her. "You have brought more than service into the institute. Do you know what you have brought? Hope!"



"The Hound!—" Began Lancaster, but Joan Interposed.

She could hardly restrain her tears, so deeply was she moved. She put her hand upon his. "Doctor Lancaster, it must never leave you again," she answered. "Lift up your eyes and look at the hills. How can one help but hope? Hope lies all about you."

"When a man lives in darkness," said Lancaster gravely, "he cannot lift up his eyes. I was broken long before I became a victim of that damnable drug. I fell into the hands of unscrupulous men. I had nothing to live for. I dwelt in shadows, hardly knowing the dream from the reality, and all the men and women about me seemed like shadows until you came. I could endure my life only because of its unreality; it was like a dream, a nightmare, which, I knew, could not last forever."

She did not answer, and he remained silent for a long time. It began to lighten. Streaks of saffron appeared against the tops of the hills. A bird awoke and called; another answered her.

"But this is hope," said Lancaster, taking Joan's hand. "You have brought it to me, and I am never going to lose it again. I am going to win my fight against the drug, and then I am going to regain all else that I have lost."

He seemed upon the verge of a revelation, but he said no more. And now the day was dawning.

"You have made a splendid fight, Doctor Lancaster," she said. "Now you shall have your hypodermic."

He rose up eagerly, and she could see the terrific strain that he was undergoing in the trembling of his limbs, the eager look in his eyes. They went back into the house. A light still burned in the secretary's room but no sound came from it. At the door of Lancaster's room he stopped.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, "I have something to say, and something to promise. I am not going to take that dose. Tonight, perhaps, but not now. If I take it and free my body from its suffering, I lose my soul again. I lose that hope which you have given me. And—I want to give you this."

He handed her a little bottle of morphine, three-quarters full.

"It is the bottle which you took from the drawer of my desk yesterday," he said. "I stole it from your pocket when you leaned over me last night, when you told me I was winning. I was a thief—but I am a penitent thief, and I restore it intact."

"No, Doctor Lancaster," answered the girl, smiling as she took the bottle from him. "That has no bearing upon your character; it was a symptom of your disease."

"Well, I didn't take any," said Lancaster, with the transient flash of humor lighting up his face. "I had the hardest conceivable battle over that bottle. I set it up before me, and I held my right hand back with my left, and I said, 'I am winning, in Joan Wentworth's name.' And at last the drug devil was beaten. And no more morphine until tonight."

"Doctor Lancaster, you have been brave and wonderful!" cried Joan, profoundly stirred. "Remember that! One of the bravest men I have ever known. Never tell me again that you have lost your power of will. We are winning fast."

He placed his hands upon her shoulders and stood looking at her. Upon his face was an expression of indulgence, as if he was considering her enthusiasm in the light of his experience of life, so much deeper than hers, so much the more profound. Then the look passed; the years seemed to fall from him, and strength came into his face.

"God bless you, my dear," he said, and bent and kissed her forehead.

She turned and ran upstairs. Her heart was singing in her breast. The flood of sunlight that came through the eastern windows, illuminating the dusty interior of the old building, seemed like a spiritual light, flaming into this dark place where shadows had dwelt so long. She went into her room and dressed for the day. She had never felt so happy before. And now the life in Avonmouth had become as dim as a dream, and she cared no longer whether she returned or not. A charge had been granted to her, a man's life put into her keeping; that trust she meant to fulfill.

She had saved Lancaster, and she would outwit Myers, and remove the only obstacle to Lancaster's recovery. She knew the man incited the doctor to drug himself. She would have known that even without the matron's statement to her. But why should Myers wish Lancaster to drug himself to death?

He must be acting for others. Whom? No matter. Once the drug evil was overcome, the plot would be revealed and overthrown.

As she stood at her window Joan heard footsteps on the path below. Looking down, she saw the secretary leaving the house, carrying a suitcase. Her heart almost stood still. Surely Myers had not acknowledged defeat and taken Lancaster at his word? Surely he did not mean to go without another struggle?

She watched him cross the grass beside the chicken coop to where the weed-grown path joined the winding road. He was outside the grounds of the institute now, and he was still going in the direction of the station. He disappeared behind the hedges, appeared again, a long way off, and vanished finally. He was gone, and the air seemed the sweeter, the day more glorious.

Joan almost danced downstairs to the dining room. Lancaster was at the table, waiting for her.

"Mr. Myers has gone away!" she cried. "Doctor Lancaster, your evil spirit has departed, suitcase and all."

Lancaster looked at her gravely. "I know," he said.

"Did he come to you? Did you discharge him?"

"He did not come to me. He did not tell the matron he was going. It looks bad."

"No," said Joan firmly, struggling against her conviction. "He was afraid. You will never see him again."

"You know what the Bible says about the unclean spirit who leaves a man, and returns with seven others, when he finds his home swept and garnished?"

"Doctor Lancaster, he has no hold on you. He can do nothing, and he will never dare to return."

"Well, my dear, we have a respite, at all events," Lancaster answered. "So let us eat our breakfast, and afterward I'll take you for a ramble through the woods, and we'll hold the fort together until evening."

Primrose Day Memorial to English Statesman

England's "Primrose day" is a tribute to the memory of Lord Beaconsfield. The primrose was his favorite flower. The story is that when he was a young man he made a bet of a pair of gloves with a lady respecting a wreath of yellow blossoms, the point in dispute being whether they were real or artificial. Disraeli stated that they were real and won the bet. The lady thereupon presented him with one of the primroses and Disraeli, with the impetuous gallantry of youth, vowed that he would treasure the flower and adopt it as his badge. "Primrose day" was founded in 1882. Next year it was determined that an annual festival should be inaugurated. Curiously enough, the primrose has for centuries been esteemed an unlucky flower among the English country folk. Shakespeare alludes to the superstition; and to this day in East Anglia, as well as throughout the western counties, it is esteemed disastrous to take a single primrose into a farmhouse. Serious loss among chickens, lambs and calves will, it is averred, inevitably result.

POULTRY

PURE BRED POULTRY MOST PROFITABLE

It is often said that pure bred flocks are more profitable than mongrels and there is every reason to believe that they are; but there is one provision that must be taken into consideration; namely, pure bred poultry must be better cared for than are mongrels. Those who do not intend to care for pure breds properly should stick to mongrels, but given care and attention pure breds will repay doubly for it as compared with the mongrels.

There are reasons, says D. H. Hall, extension poultry husbandman of Clemson college.

Pure bred poultry will produce a uniform product, and will bring a higher price. The eggs from pure breds are uniform in size, shape and color. When eggs from pure breds do vary the variation is considerably less than from mongrels.

Pure breds are faster growers and when grown produce a more uniform flock. There is not a better advertisement for a farm than a flock of pure bred chickens. They will attract more attention than any other form of live stock.

Pure breds will also lay more eggs if properly handled. This has been proved beyond all doubt by various experiment stations.

Pure bred poultry is also more economical with feed consumption. They lay more eggs, hence they pay more for their feed and give a higher profit.

Pure bred stock and eggs can be sold for breeding purposes. This will be a good source of income for the pure bred breeder. Mongrels and mongrel eggs can be sold only for market prices.

Pure breds can be exhibited in poultry shows and thus compete for prizes. There is nothing like a blue ribbon from a poultry show. Mongrels cannot be placed in a show for prizes.

Pure breds will create interest in poultry. Who is the enthusiast about poultry in any community? Why, the farmer with the pure bred, of course. Why are you not enthusiastic about your poultry? If you have mongrels that may be the reason. Get pure breds and be proud of them.

Dubbing Used to Avoid Injury to Hen's Comb

Dubbing to prevent freezing and suffering due to frozen combs has been practiced very successfully in the Purdue university poultry flocks. Freezing results in much suffering of the birds and consequently loss in fertility of eggs and hatching results. Dubbing is not new but a remedy breeders of fighting birds have always practiced to prevent injuring of combs and to conserve vigor of the males.

The operation is extremely simple and a sharp razor is used first to cut off the wattles and later to remove the comb starting at the front end. The wattles are cut quite close and the comb reasonably close to the head. The blood will flow freely but if a body fluff feather is held over cut part of the comb coagulation will soon take place and the bleeding cease. Seldom do the birds suffer from the operation and free bleeding should cause no worry. A treated bird should not be placed in an extremely cold room until the wound has healed nor should they be placed together.

It is well not to practice the operation until after the birds have been selected for the breeding pen in order to permit normal appearance of the head to be a guide in making selections.

Hen's Drinking Water

Preparations advertised as being effective in ridding hens of lice simply by placing the preparation in the drinking water or in the feed are not generally to be recommended for this purpose. Such material in the drinking water will cause the hens to drink only a limited amount of water and, as a consequence, egg production will be reduced, advises J. H. McAdams, extension poultryman, Kansas State Agricultural college.

The sure method for killing lice at this time of year is to dust the hens thoroughly with sodium fluoride, using the pinch method. Or blue ointment may be used, mixed half and half with vaseline and applying a circle of the ointment around the vent, says McAdams.

Use Well-Shaped Eggs

In selecting eggs to place in an incubator only average-sized well-shaped eggs should be used, as extremely large or small eggs, or eggs that do not conform to normal shape, will hatch a low percentage of chicks of irregular size. Do not delay the starting of the incubator for the first hatching beyond April 1, as the possibilities for profit are much greater with early-hatched chicks than with later ones. The early pullets are the ones that will be fall and winter layers.

For Setting a Hen

For a sitting hen choose one of medium weight such as are found in the American or English breeds. Make the nest at least six inches deep and sixteen inches square. For a nesting material choose something like oat straw, wheat straw, or hay. Make the nest so that the eggs will roll apart readily when the hen steps upon them, but not so flat but that they will roll together of their own accord when the hen leaves the nest. Choose a cool place, set from 11 to 15 eggs.

Better Feeding Helps

There is a tendency for the farmer to neglect his flock after the flush season. Just why people will not continually give their chickens good care is difficult to understand. Spasmodic care will never produce satisfactory results. The best practice is to feed the birds liberally and well all the time. Unless this is done cull chickens will be as plentiful as cull poultrymen. The important feature is to feed poultry mash containing tankage or meat scrap.

HOW TWO WOMEN AVOIDED OPERATIONS

The Following Letters of Mrs. Thurston and Mrs. Beard Carry an Encouraging Message to Other Sick Women

MRS. ETHEL THURSTON
324 N. PINE STREET, LIMA, OHIO

Lima, Ohio.—"I want to tell you how your medicine has helped me. For weeks I suffered with awful pains from inflammation and I was in such misery that I had to bend double to get relief. I could not be touched or jarred, had awful pain all over my abdomen and could not touch my feet to the floor. It was impossible for me to straighten up and the pains never ceased. I took treatments for some time and finally was told I would have to have an operation. I do not believe in operations, and I had read so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I told my husband I would try it before I gave up. I soon began to feel that it was doing me good. The awful misery began to leave me, also the backache. I have a good appetite and am gaining in weight. Taking the medicine was the best thing I ever did. I feel like it has saved my life and I do not hesitate to say so to my friends. At least it saved me from a dreaded operation and I am still taking it. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about the medicine."—Mrs. Ethel Thurston, 324 North Pine Street, Lima, Ohio.

Mrs. Beard's Letter

Eddy, Texas.—"I will write you a few words, thinking it will do some one else good. Two doctors said I would have to be operated on because for nearly twelve months I suffered from a weakness from which I could get no relief. I was restless and nervous and was not able to walk across the house. They said it was the Change of Life. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the newspapers, and as I could not get any help from doctors I thought I would give that a trial. I began with the liquid and it helped me some, then you advised me to take the tablet form and I began to improve rapidly. I have gained in weight from 105 to 170 pounds. I recommend it to all women with this trouble."—Mrs. M. E. Beard, R. No. 1, Box 143, Eddy, Texas.

We hope that Mr. Su will meet with success in his efforts in America but then one is led to reflect upon the experience of Prof. Kiang, an eminent chinaman who was brought from the University of Pekin to teach Chinese literature in the University of California. Now it happened that Prof. Kiang was neither a Republican nor a Democrat but a Socialist instead and when the University discovered the dreadful fact, Prof. Kiang lost his position. Naturally the university didn't care for Socialists because Socials are against the profiteers who profit exceedingly in time of war and in addition the Socialists sometimes indulge in a little muck raking when other types of profiteers are concerned. One of the bosses of California University is Mr. Fleishhacker, the biggest banker in San Francisco. Mr. Fleishhacker hires men to catch codfish for $5 per ton and then turns around and sells the fish for $160 per ton, which is some profit. Another university boss is Guy Earl, vice president of two power companies and two electric companies. Another boss is Mr. Cochran, president of an insurance company, director in Fleishhacker bank and a director in several other large industrial organizations. Death of Walter Camp, Famous Coach

In the demise of Walter Camp America loses one of its highest and best authorities on athletic matters. A graduate of Yale College his tremendous prestige enabled him to act on every case either at home or abroad where the supreme decision must be had. Mr. Camp started his momentous career as a coach of football in the big college being the author of many improvements and new ideas in this popular game. He came to be effectionaltely known as "the Father of Football."

As a player on Yale football teams for six years Mr. Camp's intest in this game extended far beyond the goal posts and the improvements in the game which he evolved were readily accepted by the inter-collegiate football committee It was during his incumbency as chairman of the committee that the game was extensively molded along the lines on which it is played today.

A much needed scraping and leveling has been performed by our obliging road committee, Harley Fry, on both Knapp and Pleasant streets, filling in the ruts and smoothing up rough spots. Mr. Fry says the village has ordered railroad cinders for street purposes this spring but so far as known they have not arrived yet. There is so much demand for these cinders that it is impossible to get more than one carload at a time. Experience has proved that for back streets where road traffic is light, cinders are the ideal grading material.

Father and Son Bauquet A Big Success

One of the most enjoyable social events ever to take place in North Adams occurred Thursday evening March 26th., when the Congregational church put on a Father and Son Banquet. There were about 90 fathers and sons who sat down to the tastily decorated tables and partook of the bountiful banquet so ably prepared by the Ladies Aid Society of the church. Between the courses all joined in singing "peppy songs" and after finishing the ice cream and cake the Toastmaster, Rev. Virgil Hunt gave the address of welcome. The following toasts were then responded to. "Setting Dad an Example", Theron Randolph "My responsibility to my Boy", R. C. Young. "Father and Son", Arthur Holcomb. These were followed by two very pretty vocal numbers sung by Mrs. Mildred Hunt in her usual pleasing manner. The first one being "In My Garden" by Thomas, and "The Lilac Tree."

The Speaker of the evening was Dr. W. W. Whitehouse, professor of Economics and Sociology at Albion College at the present time and who was a minister in the Methodist church for the past few years before taking up his duties as professor. Dr. Whitehouse spoke on the subject "Life's Supreme Challange." He handled the subject in a very capable manner and gave to the hearts of all men and boys a very inspiring and stirring message which was highly received by all who heard him. The music of the evening was given by a ladies trio composed of Mrs. Mildred Hunt, Jean Young and Naomi Crapser, accompanied by Frances Young and a well rendered piano solo by Clark Pierce.

We wish to take this opportunity of thanking the Ladies Aid for their untiring efforts and all others who contributed in any way in making the Banquet the big success it was.

10 lbs. more! per cow – per day

Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Tornado Situation Well in Hand—Second Arms Conference Likely.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THE aftermath of the five-state tornado of last week is an object lesson of the irresistible forces of nature before which even modern science is abashed; of the instinctive response to appeal from the afflicted that marks man as "little lower than the angels," and of the remedial resources of our Twentieth century civilization.

Returns to date include these figures: 830 dead and 2,939 injured, with additional deaths daily and new cases of injury. Some bodies were presumably incinerated. There is still a list of missing. In 16 Illinois communities there are 655 dead and 2,110 injured. In Murphysboro, the largest city in the devastated area, the toll was 202 dead; 700 injured; 152 city blocks practically swept clean; property loss, $4,000,000.

Radio told the catastrophe. Instantly all roads led to the devastated areas. Herrin in "Bloody Williamson" raced with the best—and lost its new $15,000 fire engine. High-priced surgeons from Chicago's "Gold Coast" operated by lantern-light. The inrush of man-help, material necessities and cash-in-hand never slackened.

No close estimate can be made of the money raised and still being raised. Illinois finished the legislative process of appropriating $500,000 Wednesday. Chicago Wednesday filled its official quota of $500,000 and may run on to $750,000. Scores of organizations working independently have added many hundreds of thousands and the end is not yet. All will be needed.

The emergency period is over. The dead have been buried. The care of the injured and sick has been organized and systematized. Rebuilding is fast solving the problem of the homeless. Soon the long, slow work of rehabilitation will be under way. This will be concentrated in the American Red Cross, which makes it a continuing process—it is still caring for victims of the Lorraine tornado and the Pueblo flood.

THE lesson of the tornado would seem to be that science, instead of telling us how it will annihilate whole peoples in the next World war, might well turn its attention to these twisters, scarcely less deadly than battles. Meteorology can explain tornadoes mathematically. Why then can it not forecast them? The weather bureau says it can never be done. It also says nothing can be done to counteract the whirls.

"Never" and "Nothing" are words which do not seem to obtain in these latter days of science. If man can annihilate time and space and a tornado takes more than four hours to run its course, cannot science at least do something to rob this visitation of "unmoral nature" of its terrors? Must man go back to his "cyclone cellar"? If so, he would better begin digging. This last loss is too great—whether reckoned in human lives, time or hard cash.

A SECOND arms limitation conference is likely to be held this summer in Washington upon the invitation of President Coolidge. This is made probable by the rejection at Geneva of the League of Nations protocol providing for compulsory arbitration of all international disputes. There can now be no cry raised of a "rival gathering." So the president has set to work the new secretary of state, Frank B. Kellogg, on the task of sounding out the nations that took part in the first conference.

The second conference will presumably start where the first left off. The first halted competition in the construction of capital ships. But there is wholesale building of cruisers, submarines, destroyers and airplanes. Limitation of the construction of these auxiliary types would therefore presumably be the business before the next conference.

It is stated that the British, Japanese and Italian governments are likely to participate. France may be unwilling, pending a solution of her security problem—which would appear to be a problem for Europe to solve.

BEFORE the United States Supreme court April 13 will come up a case in which all official Washington is intensely interested, for the reason that it is expected to settle the much-vexed question of the right of President Coolidge to remove from office that stormy petrel, John R. McCarl, comptroller general of the United States. Since 1921 McCarl has been at unceasing war with practically every executive department of the federal government. And, what's more, he asserts complete independence of presidential control. President Wilson vetoed the national budget act in 1920 because it made the comptroller general removable only by concurrent resolution of both houses of congress. President Harding in 1921 signed the new budget act, under which a comptroller general is appointed for 15 years, leaving him removable by congress but not by the President.

The case at issue is that of Frank Scott Myers, former postmaster of Portland, Ore., who was removed by President Wilson in 1920, in alleged violation of an act of congress. If the Supreme court decides that the Executive was within his authority in cancelling the Myers appointment, constitutional lawyers hold that Comptroller General McCarl's contention of presidential control will collapse.

The President, who is the real defendant, will be represented by Solicitor General James M. Beck. Senator George Wharton Pepper represents the senate. Beck's brief charges that McCarl holds that he is not bound even by the decisions of the courts. In 1924, when the house judiciary committee was holding an inquiry on McCarl's activities, Beck told the committee that he held unconstitutional the provisions of the budget act under which the comptroller general's office was created.

THE Constitution, famous United States frigate, is now one hundred thirty-one years old; is rotting at her dock in the Boston navy yard; must be restored for the third time. Congress has authorized her reconditioning, has not appropriated a cent for the work and has empowered Secretary Wilbur to accept donations. The secretary has passed the buck to the 16,000,000 school children and asks them to contribute 2½ cents each. He puts Rear Admiral de Steiguer, commandant of the Boston navy yard, in charge of the campaign and in his letter says:

"It is important that we should make clear we are not trying to help out the government in an economy program. The real matter involved is the interest of the people of the United States in an historical reminder of the progress of the nation, and if the people are not willing to support such a proposition they ought not be compelled to do so by appropriations of congress, which in effect takes the money out of their pockets without their consent."

Passing this without comment, one thing is certain: August 19, 1812, the Constitution put the American navy on the sea. In one memorable half hour she made the crack British frigate Guerriere strike her flag over a sinking wreck and a human shambles. Thereafter "Old Ironsides" outmaneuvered, outsailed and outfought the ships of the proud "Mistress of the Seas," though whole squadrons were sent after her. Her dazzling exploits made strong again the fainting soul of the people and carried the new nation on to victory. In 40 engagements "Old Ironsides" has never known defeat. To all the seven seas in 500,000 miles of cruising has she carried Old Glory. What!—

". . . tear her tattered ensign down!
Long has it waved on high,
And many an eye has danced to see
That banner in the sky!"

H. GORDON SELFRIDGE, formerly of Chicago and now a London merchant, told his stockholders the other day: "The high expenses of everything in America have forced the cost of manufacture up to a point which makes it impossible to compete with other countries."

A study of wages by the British ministry of labor, just completed in 16 cities, most of them world capitals (Philadelphia here), gives these computations: Average wages in the United States, measured in the food they will buy, are now more than twice as high as those in London, three times greater than in Paris, and nearly five times greater than in Rome, Madrid and Vienna. They are nearly three times greater than in Norway, Sweden, and Holland.

In the meantime our trade statistics show that the sales of our manufactured products are now about half of our exports. They also show that we annually sell the world nearly $3,000,000,000 more of American products than we did 15 years ago; that we sold the world $425,000,000 more last year than the year before, and that our sales are rapidly increasing. In short, we are not only competing but we are winning in the world markets, including some of the commonwealths of the British empire. And we are competing and winning because the American workman does just about three times as much as the British workman in the same industry, thus more than offsetting the difference in wages.

And now comes Sir Charles Higham, once a member of parliament and now an advertising man, to teach us Americans to drop work at four o'clock in the afternoon for tea, after the English style. It will increase our efficiency 85 per cent, don't y'know.

JURISDICTION over the patent office was transferred Friday by executive order of President Coolidge from the Interior department to the Department of Commerce, with the approval of both secretaries. Specific legislation by congress was unnecessary because of the act creating the Commerce department. Secretary Hoover of the Commerce department will demand at an international convention at The Hague, October 8, the removal of certain existing injustices toward American patentees and American manufactures. If he fails to get it, he will ask for complete revision of the patent laws of the United States, which will bring about their equitable and equal treatment in all countries.

Secretary Hoover has developed the Commerce department into the largest thing of its kind in the world. Efficiency is his passion, and he is its shining exemplar. He has won the co-operation of American business. If he stays in office long enough, he will bring about the co-ordination of all agencies bearing upon the expansion of American business at home and abroad. The latest gossip is that he had a large hand in the appointment of Secretary Jardine of the Agricultural department; that they agree in thinking that the biggest problem in agriculture is marketing, and that the two departments will work together—which has not been the case heretofore.

ARCHDUKE JOHANN SALVATOR of the royal house of Austria, who has been an international mystery ever since his elopement and supposed drowning in 1883, is dead again. This time under the name of Albert Goebel in Vienna. He was in Chicago as Johann Orth in 1908. In 1924 O. N. Orlow was buried as "Johann Salvator" in New York.

President Coolidge has given a recess appointment to Thomas F. Woodlock to be a member of the interstate commerce commission, following refusal of the senate to confirm the nomination.

The Missouri legislature has initiated legislation for the death penalty for holdup men; Illinois is considering the payment of $1,000 for bank robbers, dead or alive.

Governor Blaine of Wisconsin will not sign the bill giving bottom lands along the Mississippi to the federal government for a game and fish preserve.

Tennessee, by repealing the law of evolution, attests that nobody can make a monkey of W. J. Bryan.

The Soviet government has revoked the oil concession granted in 1923 to the Sinclair Consolidated Oil company on Sakhalien island.

Women to Consider War Being Outlawed

Richmond, Va.—The proposed program of work for the National League of Women Voters carries as one of its principal recommendations the outlawry of war and its abolition as a legalized institution. It will be submitted for consideration to the annual convention which meets in this city April 16-22.

The tentative program, a comprehensive outline covering all phases of the league's activities, is now being sent out for consideration. It includes two new federal recommendations, the first being "support of resolutions permitting United States official representation in the disarmament conference when called by the League of Nations."

The second calls for "support of measures designed to make effective the permanent court of international justice and providing for the codification of international law"; also measures designed for the outlawry of war and its abolition as a legalized institution. Appointment of women to positions in the national, state and local governments this year is supplemented by the plea for their placement on commissions "and other bodies having international representation."

The committee on education would be given the task of urging "adequate financing of the federal department of education and of public schools in the District of Columbia, as well as federal aid to states under the public school system research."

How to build up your Weight

TO BE under weight often proves low fighting-power in the body. It often means you are minus nerve power, minus red-cells in your blood minus health, minus vitality. It is serious to be minus, but the moment you increase the number of your red-blood-cells, you begin to become plus. That's why S. S. S., since 1826, has meant to thousands of underweight men and women, a plus in their strength. Your body fills to the point of power, your flesh becomes firmer, the age lines that come from thinness disappear. You look younger, firmer, happier, and you feel it, too, all over your body. More red blood-cells! S. S. S. will build them.

WHAT STATE LAW MAKERS ARE DOING

No Voting Reform Is Likely At This Session Of The Legislature

Lansing, Mich.

Governor Alex J. Groesbeck's opposition to any type of primary election reform, to party enrollment and to the pre-primary convention has made itself known. The hopeless election law tangle, which has only increased since the beginning of the session, reached a point where it is about certain no reforming legislation will be passed.

The senate passed the Wood election law bill on third reading. The bill passed, however, is not the Wood bill which was introduced, but a mere codification of the existing law. Still bearing Wood's name, but with all its party enrollment and election of delegates' teeth neatly drawn, the bill was brought out of the committee, passed on general orders, put on its immediate passage under suspension of the rules and shot through the senate.

Rapid transit legislation for Detroit has been sidetracked in the house of representatives. It was Governor Alex J. Groesbeck who pulled the switch turning the Detroit commission's enabling bill off the legislative right of way and back into committee.

The transit commission's bill was one of the first to be introduced at this session of the legislature. Twice it has been sent back to committee and amended to conform to ideas of manufacturers and business interests of Detroit. It was apparently acceptable to everybody interested, but the governor decided it was unconstitutional. He declared that if it came to him in its present form he would veto it. Its present form is fundamentally the same as the enabling act of 1923, which he signed.

The house of representatives has expressed a desire to honor Edgar A. Guest, whose verse has won him national renown.

The Howell bill providing for the appointment of a poet laureate for Michigan by the governor was passed by a vote of 87 to 5.

Representative Chester M. Howell, of Saginaw, the introducer, explained that the bill was sponsored by Michigan Kiwanians who are ready to petition the governor for the appointment of Guest in event the bill also passes the senate and is signed by the governor as is expected.

The position is purely honorary. It carries with it no salary. According to Howell, it is just intended to reward Guest for the cheer that his rhyme has brought to many hearts.

The University of Michigan appropriation bill, calling for an expenditure of $3,192,700, was reported out of the House University committee without amendment. But, it is reported authoritatively, the Governor and House leaders have agreed to grant the university nothing in the way of funds for new buildings except $900,000 for the proposed museum.

After heated debate in which motives of sponsors and critics of the bill were attacked and the state department of health flayed as untrustworthy, the house of representatives voted to shunt the Smedley anti-stream pollution bill off the calendar and back into committee. Man members believe that by so doing they succeeded in killing the bill.

The members of the House who want the richer counties of the state to contribute toward the upkeep of schools in the needy counties, fought off two amendments to the Bohn Primary School Fund Bill, and sent it sailing on its way to a third reading. Wayne county will lose $300 000 of its annual school funds if the bill becomes a law.

One of the bills passed by the House of Representatives would appropriate $69,000 for the State Sanitarium at Howell. Originally this bill called for an appropriation of $770,000 but the members of the Ways and Means Committee, with their eyes on the $14,500,000 mark set by Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, had used their sharp axe.

The Bryant Bill, proposing the establishment of a fifth State normal college in the northern part of the state, was sent back to the committee by the House. It had been reported out by the Ways and Means Committee with a minor error in the phraseology and was sent back for correction.

Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck has denied a request of the governor of Indiana for the extradition of Albert O. Rogers of Ionia, on a warrant for passing worthless checks.

The Pearson Bill, to relieve lands held for reforestation from the burden of excessive taxes, passed the Senate, having encountered no serious obstacles since it was introduced. It has gone to the House. Enactment of this bill into law would make possible the reforestation of more than one-third of the State's total area of 26,000,000 acres, it is estimated by officials of the bureau of agricultural industry, State Department of Agriculture, who have just completed results of a survey of 16 counties

The Leland Potato Grading Bill, rewritten to meet the objections of its assailants, was passed by the senate. It must still run the gauntlet of the House. The bill provides for three grades: "U. S. No. 1," "U. S. No. 1 small," and "U. S. No. 2." All others would be classed as culls. These grades are now being enforced by the State Department of Agriculture through the blanket authority it possesses, but the bill would strengthen the department's hand in court proceedings

Let Us Bring Back To The Public Schools Study Of The Word Of God

I'd like to see the Bible placed
Where the Bible used to be,
Upon the top of teacher's desk
For every child to see;
I'd like to hear the teacher say,
As my teacher used to do:
"Before we work or play, today,
I want to read to you."

I'd like to see the teacher stand
Before the class again,
And lift with reverent care the Book
That makes God's purpose plain.
And ere the youngsters went to work
Repeat those words of truth and faith
That make one's soul rejoice.

I'd like to see her face light up
At each resplendent word,
And watch the children's souls shine out
At the messages they had heard;
Yes, I'd like to see the Bible placed
Where the Bible used to be;
I'd like to hear it read aloud
In the schoolrooms of the free.

Everybody who is interested in the future of our great nation is today casting about in his mind for a cure for the crime wave which continues to sweep over our cities. A great Jewish organization has recently been formed for the purpose of encouraging all efforis for the spiritual welfare of Jewish children Its slogan is "Religion a cure for crime."

During the past year, 10,000 young people and children have been brought under the influence of religious instruction through the efforts of this agency. It is high time that all churches, as well as religious, moral and philanthropic organizations should awaken to the fact that we have, in great measure, forsaken and forgotten the study of the word of God, without which there can be no religious life. Thirty nations are represented among the two hundred foreign students now in attendance at Columbia University The foreign-born white population of Nem York City is as large as the entire foreign born white population of Chicago, Detroit and Boston together; the Russian element is larger than that of the city of Warsaw and the Italians exceed the population of Naples by over 100,000.

The native white stock in New York is 1,163,934 against 4,294,629 The only hope for this city and the country is the Bible. A German woman recently deported showed a government official some of the things she had received during detention. On the very top of her suit-case was a German Bible. She said, "This Book has been the greatest comfort to me in my detention: I am going to take it whereyer I go."

That is just what this blessed word of God is to all who gets its meaning, Shall we, a Christian nation, withhold its teachings from the children and youth of our nation, foreign as well as nativeborn by refusing to have it read in our public schools?

We all recognize that the stability of state and nation depends at least as much upon the morality as upon the intelligence of its citizens. The conclusion is absolute that in the interest of self-preservation there must be given to the future citizens of state and nation, in the public schools, the only place where this can be done for all a foundation of good character.

The exclusion of the Holy Bible from the curriculum of the public school is a direct refusal to teach the fundamental principals of our Christian nation, and is as dangerous to the welfare of our country as the throwing of a fire-brand into a bundle of fagots.

Our women realize the importance of a continued and intensive education of sentiment for the Bible in the public schools but there are yet a number of states in which this very important department is not a part of the program. If we can get every woman who wears the white ribbon so deeply interested in this great movement for the return of the Bible to the public schools that she will be a continual booster for it—the work is half done.

God speed the day when with one accord we shall bring home to the study of the Bible all of the wanderers in this land of ours.

It was a great disappointment to the people of Utah as it seemed the most opportune time to open the work here. We had just succeeded in electing a Reform Sheriff in Salt Lake County by nominating an Independent candidate in opposition to both of the Old Parties who for years had been electing alternately two men whose records were corrupt. As President of the Ministerial Association I had been prominent in the fight because it was entirely non-partisan and with no other issue than the enforcement of law, especially the prohibition law. After unanimous endorsement by our Ministerial Association, I succeeded in getting the endorsement of the President of the Mormon church and all his Stake Presidents in the County. These Stake Presidents hold a similar position to our District Supts. and have oversight and control over a certain number of wards or churches. There are seven of them in this county. This was the first time in history when the Mormons and Evangelical Churches had all united on any moral reform. While all three candidates were Mormons, our candidate was not considered very prominent in the church nor very subservient to their direction, but he pledged himself to full enforcement of the law. The Republican candidate who was nominated to succeed himself, was from a very prominent Mormon family and a favorite with many, but his record had been dictated by the underworld.

Every vote had to be scratched in order to vote for the Independent Candidate, but so thoroughly did we work that at the election our man received about 16,000 votes, the Republicans 12,000 and the Democrats 10,000. The enemies of Temperance were thunder struck and started a protest to prevent the Sheriff from taking his oath on the ground that the churches had exercised too much influence in the election. But the Supreme Court ruled against them. They also started several suits against him for raiding prominent homes. Some they won, and some they lost. To date, it has cost the sheriff over $10,000 in his fight and we are trying to raise the money to reimburse him. He has been offered almost incredible sums as bribes but he has refused them all. His bondsmen threatened to quit him if he did not slow up, and one night the bootleggers sent a grip with $30,000 cash to him to pay his cash bond of $20,000 and the $10,000 expense incurred, but he refused it all, they bankrupted him but he says he will die in his tracks before he will surrender to them. This you see is the fight we are in and I cannot leave it yet.

When the A. S. L. backed out of coming into the state, Bishop Leonard offered to open a place for me in the California Conference, but the Mormons begged me to stay and finish the fight. They organized a State Social Welfare League and elected me as Secretary and promised to give me the same salary as the A. S. L. had offered, but the expense of the fight in our county has made it unadvisable to raise money for state work just now, so the sheriff asked me last September to become a deputy and take charge of the records of delayed and appealed cases, and of the persisted violator and injunction cases. I do no sleuthing nor raiding, and make no arrests. My work is in Courts and trying to co-ordinate the Government, County, and City Courts and officers. I also go all over the county giving Temperance and Law Enforcement addresses to increase public sentiment.

My health has been very uncertain for over a year, and seriously so at times, and twice this winter it looked as though my work was near its end. But an osteopath doctor diagnosed my trouble after others had failed and I am much improved now. For the last six weeks I have not missed a day's work. I teach the Bible Class at the First M. E. church in Salt Lake, conduct the prayer meeting when the Pastor is away, preach for the pastors when they are called out of the city, supplied a Congregational Community church for seven Sundays during November and December at a city forty miles from here. In the last one and one half years, since surrendering the pastorate here, I have preached twenty six times in Evangelical churches of the State, giver Temperance addresses in five Mormon churches, addressed a Parents Teachers' meeting, two High schools and three grade schools.

I am to go forty miles from here to preach for a Methodist Pastor on the twenty second of this month and at another Mormon church on the 29th. I have also given four different addresses for the W. C. T. U. I have written you thus fully that you may see something of the varied life that has been mine, uneventful in some respects, but rather eventful in other respects. It is 19 years next month since I broke down and there have been many dark and trying days and sometimes the clouds have hung very low but it has never been so dark that I have lost sight of God. In your letter you say you hope I still have opportunity to speak and act for the Master and as I have written you of my activities even while out of the pastorate you may see that I have not ceased to work for the Master whenever opportunity afforded. During the seven years between my sickness and the time I re-entered the pastorate at Tooele, Utah, I preached 97 times and gave some 20 Temperance addresses besides addressing several schools and Business Colleges, I was working Insurance most of the time and helped the preachers wherever I went, often preaching in Revival services. I also did some Anti Saloon work in Nebraska. I love to preach the Gospel and trust that I may again recover health so that it will be safe for me to go back into the pastorate.

For the time being I am helping the sheriff and receiving a moderate salary from the County, and am doing some constructive Temperance work. I felt that my work was not done when I had helped to elect a Reform Sheriff until I had also helped get public sentiment back of his program. I did not think it good policy to desert the only man who has ever tried to put over a genuine law enforcement program here. I feel that I am verily doing God's service for the time, Of course I have suffered from the standpoint of relative standing in my Conference and from my Annuity record of service and will suffer when I attempt to return to active work but I have tried to listen to a higher call than of personal gain. and am sure God understands. He has blessed me wonderfully in my work in Utah. During the past 12 years I have undoubtedly spoken to more Mormons than has any other preacher in the State during the same time. I have never compromised a principle with any of them, but have worked with them wherever they were right and have held up Jesus Christ higher than they have dared to hold up Joseph Smith. And in my present work I do not hesitate to let every one know I am a Methodist Preacher primarily and secondarily a deputy and that only temporarily for a definite purpose. I did not know that my picture was to be sent out of the County when it was taken. When asked for that privilege I told them "No" for I cared for no advertisement.

Tells Radio World of Poultry

All the latest modern wrinkles in poultry keeping are included in a series of radio talks which D. E. (Ted) Hale gives over WLS, the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation station. Mr. Hale is a poultry expert of national reputation, a former breeder and poultry journal editor. He has traveled over thirty states, lecturing and judging more than 100 varieties of poultry. In his wide experience he has closely followed all the modern methods and appliances developed in the industry. He has seen the introduction of mammoth incubators, fresh air poultry houses, dry mash system of feeding and registration of high production layers. He has been in the work from the time when most chickens were hatched with a hen and raised or brooded with the hen in a small coop and fed cracked corn or corn meal. He has seen the chicken population of the country double in number. All the wealth of this wide experience is used in his radio talks to the farmers of the nation.

But I am glad that the picture has put me in touch with several of my old friends. Some day I hope to be back in the work I love most This is "duty" now and content to feel that God is blessing me in it. I am glad your health is improving and trust you will be greatly benefited by your winter in Florida. Michigan has had a very hard winter and we have had the coldest weather in Utah for 25 years, and the hardest one for forty years. Have had ten days of beautiful spring weather but a heavy snow today. We are close to mountains covered with snow the year around I regret to hear of Mrs. Carrel's death, but what a blessing she was spared to you so long. Where are your children? Are they still living? Yes, father and mother have gone on before also Mina and Maytie, Will's wife and Charlie's wife and so many of those we once knew. Father was 90 when he died and a benediction for years to us and to others. Will and Cora are in California at San Deigo, but Charlie lives now in Washington D. C. His son graduates this year in law at George Washington University Mrytie and Lulu are the only ones in Michigan. My wife and I are here in Utah. We have no children If I do not re-enter the pastorate. we will go to California as soon as possible to spend the balance of our lives probably.

May God bless you and give you blessed peace the balance of your life. I thank God for your influence on my early life.

Yours fraternally,

Reminiscenses of An Old Whaler

Fred Rock of this village recently gave us a short dissertation on the science of whaling and whale ships first hand as he sailed on two whaling voyages in his younger days and we like to publish the truth about this occupation since there has been so much that is pure bunk told concerning the ways of the craft that ply the high seas to catch the great mammals. The subject was brought about by numerous assertions made by church people who did not believe it possible for a whale to swallow a man. Mr. Rock settles ths controversy by the following excellent account:

"Reasons why I believe the Bible Story of Jonah Lying three days and three nights in the Whale's Belly as Recorded in Matthew 12-10—The act concerning Jonah should be considered small as compared with the creation of the world and its contents. There is not any thing impossible with God. 2nd. My own individual knowledge of a whale as to its size and also size of throat characteristics. I will give to the reader only absolute facts.

November 15 1875 I sailed on my first voyage from New Bedford Mass. on a whale ship for a four year voyage for Sperm whale in the south Atlantic Ocean. We captured three whales and when we were near the Straits of Magellan we ran into a storm lasting three days and three nights. The Captain, a man past three score years, said the last night before the wind went down at sunrise. "I have sailed since I was twelve years old and this is the worst storm I have ever passed through but we might better go down with the ship than go ashore for we would be eaten by cannibels. We are near the coast of Patagonia" Since then the village of Punta Arenas has been built on the Strait of Magellan which is the fartherest town south in the world. The natives were driven north and the land used for feeding large herds of cattle owned by northern capitalists. After the wind went down it was twenty four hours before the sea was calm enough for us to set sail. We had been pumping the ship with two pumps one half the time from a leak. The Jib boom and all head sails were gone and the ship partly dismasted and also the bulwarks gone even with the deck. The sea would wash the deck back to quarter deck at the stern of the ship. During that time all we had to eat was sea biscuit (hard tack) and rainwater drank from the hand.

We had a crew of thirty five officers and men. It has always been known that as a rule seamen are very profane and our ship was no exception but during the entire storm I did not hear an oath from any man. The nearest dry dock where we could get repairs was St. George, Bermuda Islands which is in north latitude 32—a long way to go with a crippled ship. We arrived there May 2nd 1876 and waited for orders. The owner ordered us home with the ship and we arrived in New Bedford in July having been out nine months. Whale ships intend to make some port every six or eight months, ship the oil home and take fresh supplies then go out for another cruise.

There are five species of whale known to whale fishermen. The Sperm, Hump back, Fin back, Bow head and Wright whale. The Sperm is the only whale that has the ivory teeth and chews its food. All other whales have the Black bone as used in whips etc., running around the mouth from the upper jaw about one half inch apart and about eight inches wide in the jaw running to a point at the bottom which is below the under jaw and outside of it. The whale bone is tapering and the grain runs straight. Several inches of the lower end is hair. So in looking into a whale's mouth it looks like a mat of black horse hair and when feeding, which we call scooping they open the mouth wide and start off at express train speed until they have enough fish in the mouth then close it. They strain the water through the hair and swallow what they have caught.

There is a food that God provides for the whale and all other fish known as the squid composed of small sea insects and resembles the lungs of cattle or other animals, forms in a lump and floats around in certain latitudes which fish with teeth bite off and eating what they want, leaving some for other fish. A captain of a whale ship said he had seen a piece of squid as large as the body of the ship. I have never seen a large piece. God provides food for birds of the air, fishes of the sea and man of the earth. The most unthankful being of all is sinful man.

Since mineral oil has been in use, whaling business is falling off. Few ships are in use as compared to years ago and the business is confined to steamships in the Arctic ocean catching the Bowhead.

The black bone is very expensive. Ladies do you know that hundreds of tons of whale bone is made into switches for you to wear. It is the nearest to the human hair of anything used. In New York are the largest manufacturers of whale bone switches. The oil from all whales caught is tried out in two large kettles on deck and barreled. But the most valuable part is the bone taken from the head and bundled. I have seen bone 16 feet long from the jaw of a whale, and they produce a ton or more, according to size. The Fin Back whale is not worth catching and the Hump Back whale gives a cheap quality of oil and their bone is not worth taking. When oil was worth more they used to catch this species occasionally but I do not think they are taken now.

The case and body oils are all that is produced by the Sperm whale that is marketable.

The case oil is taken from a sack in the head, and is dipped out with a bucket from a large hole cut in the top. A whale that will make from 40 to 60 barrels of body oil, will furnish 14 to 16 barrels of case oil. Sperm candles are made from this oil which is the only whale oil that will harden, In short, it is the brains of the whale and before trying out looks like any other animal's brains.

A whale swims and lives in the water but is not a fish. It is a mammal and breeds and nurses its calves like a cow, cannot live under the surface without coming to the top to breathe or "spout" which is simply letting out water and taking in air. The worst enemy of the whale is a fish somewhat smaller, known as a "Whale Killer." Several of these will attack the whale when he comes to the surface to "spout" and keeping him down under eventually drown the monster. They then eat the carcass. If a ship's officer sees these "killers" attacking a whale the crew will wait until they kill the mammal and his dead body comes to the surface. Then boats are manned and the carcass whipped alongside and tried out. So you see men will steal food from the poor hungry fish.

Now I have given you the history of four kinds of whales in a manner necessary to make the reader under stand that these mammals are larger than any other denizen of the sea. For believing the Bible story I base my reasons principally on my persenal examinations of the 5th species or Wright whale which like the Bowhead, is found only in cold water.

When I arrived home from my first voyage I was asked by many if I knew the size of a whale's throat—which I knew was only an excuse to argue the Bible story of Jonah, and for the purpose of discrediting that good old book I love so well, the truth of which can be proven easier than any other word ever printed. There are men who have different reasons for talking against the Bible.

1st—Some men think it smart and love to hear themselves.

2nd—Some want to make others believe the whole Bible is a lie.

3rd—Others who are highly educated hang out a shingle as great scientific men who can give to God lessons as to how the world was created and how old it is and how our ancestors used to climb around in tree tops and how it was impossible for a whale to swallow Jonah because its throat was too small and he would smother, or the gastric juice would poison the man, and so on ad nauseum. When I realize so many people have to read such rot I wonder if it would not be a blessing to mankind if some of them had drank a glass of whale gastric juice long ago. Just have pity for the poor things; they don't know any better. They were brought up that way. There is no man living, or ever did live who knows the size of a whale's throat without making an examination as I did, It would be just as impossible as it would have been for Jonah to swallow the whale, and I shall prove it to you.

On my next voyage I went to the north-east from New Bedford to East Greenland within sight of the Arctic Circle, arriving the first week in July, at which time we had 22 hours of daylight out of the 24, (when there was no fog) and we left there August 20th, arriving at Fayal in the Azores September 2, during which time we experienced only three weeks of clear weather. At other times there was heavy fog by reason of proximity to land and so many icebergs. We had extra good luck, capturing five whales. My boat got the last one which proved to be a scrapper, and with his ponderous tail he knocked a hole in the boat near the keel six feet long and six inches wide. He produced 50 barrels of oil. In the fracas we lost our oars overboard,

SOUND PRINCIPLES FOR ALLIED DEBTS

Payments to America Should Be Guided by Dawes Plan, Says C. E. Mitchell.

The fundamental principles of the Dawes plan for settling the European war debt question are applicable to the problem of the Allied debts to the United States, Charles E. Mitchell, president of the National City Bank of New York, declares in an article in the American Bankers Association Journal. Mr. Mitchell says:

"Debts between nations are always a source of international trouble, and I consider it of great importance that our own economic as well as political relations with such countries as France, Belgium and Italy may be improved by an early adjustment of their debts to our own national government.

Country Endorsed Dawes Plan

"I hope that we are gradually learning that such debts, if unduly forced, may result more calamitously to the commercial interests of our own country than to those of the debtor country. This talk of forcing payment of 'every dollar to the last penny,' is commercially unwise. I think we may assume that the Dawes plan has had the indorsement of the American people through their election of General Dawes to the Vice Presidency of the United States. That plan is one that establishes fundamental principles which may be applied in considering the debts of one nation to another resulting from war.

"The first principle, as I see it, is that the yoke of the war debt shall not be held as a burden upon the people beyond the generation that had to do with the war. This principle is clearly intimated in the fact that the industrial and railway debentures which form the principal security and means of payment of the debt carry 5 per cent interest with 1 per cent amortization, which means that such obligations are to be over a period of about thirty-six years.

An Invitation to Trouble

"Any attempt to force the carrying of such debt burdens to the second and third generations is but an engraved invitation to further trouble.

"The second principle is that the debtor country shall be taxed to the limit while the debt remains, but in no event to a point where its economic structure collapses under the strain, and, further, that the nationals of the debtor country shall in no case have a lesser burden of taxation upon them than have the nationals of the creditor country—another principle the soundness of which cannot be questioned.

"The third principle is that with such taxes collected, payments therefrom shall be made to the creditor country to such an extent only as they can be made without disrupting international exchange and commerce. The soundness of this last is apparent on its face.

"These I regard as the fundamental principles of the Dawes plan, and all of the hundreds of pages of the so-called Dawes report are devoted to setting up the machinery by which these principles can be put into effect.

"If these principles are accepted as sound then they must also be sound principles by which the payment of the debts of allied countries to us shall be determined, and we would best apply such a yardstick as our measure, rather than attempt to make popular the slogan of 'every dollar to the last penny.' In the adjustment of our foreign relations, essential to the development of increased export and import trade, there can be no problem of greater importance than reaching a sound and final conclusion as to this irritating question of the debts of allied countries to ourselves."

CLEAN UP AND PAINT-UP

Real estate men know that well kept property is more valuable—for sales, or rental, or a loan. They know also that a paint-needy house drags down the value of all other property in the neighborhood.

HELP FOR MOTHERS OF AILING DAUGHTERS

Mrs. Quigg and Mrs. Betton Tell in the Following Letters What Is Best To Do

DAUGHTER OF MRS. QUIGG
210 MAIN STREET, ROYERSFORD, PA.

Royersford, Pa. — "My daughter was sickly from the time she was 13 years old, and when she was 15 she was irregular and also had severe headaches and pains in her sides and back. She was this way about six months before I began giving her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regularly although she had tried it before. It helped her very much. She is not bothered by headaches, backaches, or cramps any more, and has not missed but one days work. We recommend it to other mothers with girls who have these troubles." —Mrs. QUIGG, 210 Main Street, Royersford, Pa.

Mrs. Betton's Letter

Ridgely, Md.—"I want to tell you how much good your Vegetable Compound has done my daughter. Before she started taking your medicine she was in a nervous, run-down condition, so that she could hardly sleep at night. She always had a pain in her side and sometimes cramps so that she would have to go to bed. She is a schoolgirl and was going to school only half the time because she was so weak and run-down she could not stand it to walk there some days. She was this way for three or four years. She had been reading your advertisements in the different newspapers and she noticed that some of the girls and women had suffered just as she had. So she took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and is a lot better. With the first bottle everybody could see a big change. She can go to school every day and can eat just as much as any one else, when before she did not have any appetite. We have told others about the medicine, and we are perfectly willing for you to use these facts as a testimonial. We are also willing to answer letters from other women concerning the help my daughter has received from the Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. JOSEPH BETTON, Ridgely, Maryland.

Woman Side Issue

W. L. George, the English feminist, tried, at a Chicago banquet, to convert a conservative divine to feminism.

The divine listened to Mr. George's arguments a good half hour, then shut him up rather sharply with the words:

"The importance of woman! You've dinned the importance of woman into my ears from the soup all the way to the ice cream. The importance of woman! But don't you know, young man, that Scripture teaches us woman is only a side issue?"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Chapter VIII

By the next morning there was no doubt that victory had been won. There was color in Lancaster's face, a lightness in his step; and, best of all, he was psychically whole. The drug devil still clung to the nervous refuges of its physical domain, the hands still trembled, the man started at sudden sounds; but the shifty, furtive, lying spirit had taken its departure.

Joan only discovered afterward what Lancaster must have endured. The treatment had been more heroic than Joan had known, with her own limited experience, and the antidotes which she administered, under Lancaster's own directions, were purposely limited, for fear of supplanting one habit with another.

Lancaster had gone through the worst of his ordeal; and yet certain features of his illness were puzzling to both of them. The symptoms of morphine poisoning, elusive and protean as they are, seemed in this case irreconcilable with those classically accepted. There was Lancaster's complete prostration on the morning when Joan discovered the nature of his illness. He told her afterward that he had been conscious all the time, but physically inert, as if paralyzed. That did not point to morphine poisoning. And a certain lethargy remained one of the last symptoms of the case.

The intimacy of the sick room, born of their struggle, had become the most natural thing to both of them. The passing of Myers had wrought an extraordinary change in the atmosphere of the institution. And somehow the news of Lancaster's recovery had spread into Millville. Joan inferred that even the country people had boycotted the institute, but now two mothers brought their babies to Lancaster, and it was amazing and delightful to Joan to see the doctor's transformation, his jolliness and tenderness toward the children.

"I'm using my respite," he said whimsically. "I want to get well to face my harder battle."

"It is no respite," answered Joan. "You are free now, Doctor Lancaster; it is only a habit of thought that holds you."

There ensued three wonderful days after the secretary's departure, always to remain clear in the girl's memory. They were three days of uninterrupted recovery. After the second no more morphine was given. The fight was won; there was no questioning that.

"I suppose you will have to return to Avonmouth soon," Joan suggested.

He turned a startled look on her. "Yes—soon," he said, and fell into a gloomy meditation from which she could not arouse him.

That afternoon a telephone message came from Thompson, a hill village, fifteen miles distant. A farm-hand had been crushed by a falling tree; would Lancaster come at once and see if anything could be done for him?

"Would you like to come with me?" asked the doctor.

"If I can be of help."

"Of course you can—the greatest help. I shall need you badly, perhaps to administer an anesthetic," he answered.

Lancaster telephoned to Jenkins for the buggy, and half an hour later they were driving along the country road into the heart of the mountains. They traveled for the most part in silence; Lancaster's thoughts were occupied with his prospective case, and Joan was content to sit quietly at his side and watch the changing panorama of the land she loved and knew so well.

The road ascended continuously, until at last, when the sun was low down in the sky, they entered Thompson, a tiny settlement in the very heart of the mountain peaks.

It was a serious case, and the patient was already comatose. The tree had fallen across the chest, crushing it, and driving a rib into a lung. An immediate operation offered the only hope, and the doctor decided to perform it in the cabin.

Joan, having bundled out the family and the neighbors, administered the ether. She had never been greatly impressed by the legend of the skilled surgeon with the wonderful touch; her first operation at Avonmouth had seemed to her like a sort of glorified plumbing, and the leisurely manner of the surgeons had reduced the art to a science in her estimation. Now she revised her opinion as, seated at the patient's head, she watched Lancaster working within a compass of fractional inches, where a slip would have been deadly. His fingers, which had trembled as he held the reins, were as steady as the steel instruments he held, his deftness and precision were amazing; and when at last the operation was ended, and the patient's recovery announced as probable, she could not conceal her enthusiasm.

They were to remain at the cabin overnight in case of a change for the worse, returning to the institute in the morning. After a scrappy meal they had wandered to the end of the village, toward a patch of woodland that was encroaching on the tiny settlement. The long summer twilight still held the land, although the mountain tops were already vague and shadowy. They stood there, looking down toward the level country under them.

"I think you are the most wonderful surgeon in the world," said Joan. "And you see I didn't faint this time," she added.

"Faint? Why should you faint?" asked Lancaster, looking at her with a puzzled expression.

"You seemed to regard my weakness in the operating room as a sign of my incapacity," she replied, a little chagrined that he should have dismissed the matter from his mind.

Lancaster looked at her with that strange glance which seemed always designed to hide his thoughts. Then his face softened.

"Joan, do you know that I owe everything on earth to you—to you, my dear?" he asked.

And he took her in his arms and kissed her.

"That's what you mean to me," he said. "I can't lose you; I want you to fill the life that you have given back to me."

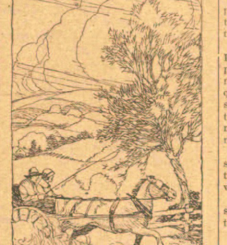
And at the touch of his lips on hers Joan knew that in truth she loved him; all that she had heard of the man's past, his dissolute life, the talk of Avonmouth, was forgotten. She only knew that she loved him, not with the wild passion of which she had heard, but with a quiet and abiding fondness, none the weaker for its qualities of calmness; and it was the most natural thing in the world that she, who had given him life again, should give her own life also to this wonderful, strong man who had risen above his wrongs and driven the besetting devils from him by valorous strength. Her heart was lifted up; serene and trustful she returned his kiss.

"I love you, too," she answered. "Nothing of the past shall ever come between us."

They were at the verge of the forest, upon a height that overlooked Millville and Lancaster, hill villages, but now outspread in the shadowy plain beneath them. A dozen counties could be dimly discerned from that spot by daylight. Far in the distance were the coastal lands, nearer the cultivated belt, nearer still the little farms, and the matchless mountains all about them. It was their home country—both of them were thinking that; the smell of the rich soil was in their nostrils, and in their hearts the sense of home.

"Joan, can a man begin to build up his life again at thirty-eight, after he has missed everything?" asked Lancaster, after a long silence.

"You have proved that he can," she answered. "But you have not missed everything, my dear. You are a very great man, and a man with a great work in the world. Many men have gone along the path you took, but few have found the strength to turn back as you have done."



They Traveled for the Most Part in Silence.

"Joan, I want to tell you something. I was engaged to be married once—years ago. She ran away on the evening before our marriage day. It was the beginning of my downfall. I thought I loved her."

His face was haggard. Divining his distress, Joan slipped her hand into his.

"Joan, dearest," said Lancaster, after a pause, "I have often thought that some day I would tell you all the wretched story of the past. But I have been thinking differently today. I was entrapped by an unscrupulous man, who robbed me of everything that made life worth living. But there is nothing that would make me afraid to look my fellow men in the face. It is myself whom I have shamed and humiliated. Joan, I want to say nothing, not because I would keep anything from you, but because I want to start my life anew. I shall never go back to the institute."

"You mean, dear—?"

"Never. I shall not return tomorrow. I want you to come to the Southwest with me, Joan, my dear. We will drive across the hills to Carroll's and catch the through train there. I shall begin to live the new life you have given me. Will you leave everything for my sake, Joan? Is it too hard a request?"

"It is not too hard," she answered. "But it is not right for you."

"It is right for me to leave a living death behind me."

"No, dear. It is running away. You spoke to me of some harder fight to be fought."

"With nothing to win, Joan—nothing. When I leave here no human being will miss or regret me."

"There is your work at Avonmouth. There is the hospital which you have made famous throughout the United States. Your work is there, not in some obscure place where it would be of less use to the world and no example. Besides, consider that if you become famous again, as you must, you will be discovered. And one can never leave his past behind him. That follows everywhere."

"Yes, that is true," muttered Lancaster, staring out over the darkening hills. "Well, I leave it to you, my dear, but to go back to fight out a futile battle seems to me now something unendurable."

"You must go back to the institute, and then to Avonmouth, and meet your enemies, John," she said. "I shall be at your side. Nothing will make me afraid, or weaken my love for you."

His face twitched. "Not if I tell you things which prove me worthless of your love?" he asked. "Not if you find I am an outcast man who has deserved his misfortunes?"

She only smiled at him. "I shall not judge you by your words," she said, "nor yet by other men's opinions, but my knowledge of you."

"Then I shall tell you everything," he answered, drawing Joan's hand into his. "Everything, but not here. Here I shall keep the peace of the hills within my heart, and you."

So they strolled back toward the cabin, and Joan's drab-colored life was transmuted in this, her first love, to gold. She lived in her lover, she trusted wholly in him who had brought love to her, not like a conquering god, but in the simplest guise, making it the unfolding of her own loving nature. She gave her youth, her innocence as love's price, and thought the exchange her profit. There was never such peacefulness in any place as there that evening, and in Joan's heart was abounding peace likewise.

When they reached the cabin the patient was better. Lancaster spent the evening giving detailed instructions to the man's wife.

"I shall do my best to come again if I am needed," he said. "But I can't promise. I may be called to Avonmouth at any moment. Keep him quiet, for heaven's sake keep him absolutely motionless for a week, and then let him sit up if he wants to. And nothing to eat but the schedule I am making out for you."

Afterward Joan told Lancaster that she wished to stay for a few days to take care of the man. But Lancaster would not hear of it.

"These hill people never die," he said. "He'll be up and about before the week is over."

"But the diet?"

"They'll feed him on soda biscuits as soon as he's well enough to eat anything. Fortunately he won't be able to eat for a week, so he won't come to any harm. I shall send Jenkins over two or three times to report progress."

Joan's room was a tiny place under the eaves. She spent a sleepless, happy night there, thinking over the happiness that had come to her. It was strange and wonderful to lie awake under the same roof that sheltered Lancaster, and to reflect how soon their lives would flow together, calmly, in their own country. She could not have wished any happier fate in life.

With her limited experience, it seemed ideal that, after the years of stress in Avonmouth, she should be returning, almost to her own home, a wife. She had puzzled sometimes over Lancaster's long residences in the place that bore his name. But she dreamed of the time when he would give up his work at Avonmouth and retire to a new institute, a spacious home where they could fill their wards with the country people, where her life's vocation and her life's happiness would be united.

At last she fell asleep, and, when she awoke, Lancaster was tapping at her door.

"Time to get up, Joan!" he called cheerfully.

She sprang out of bed. "How is the patient?" she asked.

"Doing finely and wants to go to work," said Lancaster, laughing.

Joan dressed in a hurry and ran downstairs. Lancaster was waiting on the porch. She raised her face for his kiss, already natural to her, already the happy fulfillment of her innocent dreams of love. Then, arm in arm, they strolled out into the sunlight.

The glorious light lay on every hill. In that light all the shadows of the past seemed to shrivel away.

"We are going back to the institute this morning, Joan," said Lancaster.

Vast Stores of Gold Await Lucky Finders

What becomes of gold? It has many channels of disappearance, according to experts. Figures show that more than half of the annual output is employed in the fine arts and jewelry trade. Thousands of pounds also are used by dentists, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, one estimate being that over a ton is needed every year for the filling of teeth. Then money is worn in handling, this loss being one and a quarter million dollars annually. Bank of England sovereigns are often tested and found to have lost much of the original weight.

Of the immense quantities of the precious metal that have been buried away in the earth, it is believed comparatively little has ever been recovered. The priests of Peru are said to have buried approximately ten million dollars' worth of treasure to preserve it from the clutches of their persecutors. None of this has been found. The tombs of the old kings of Egypt were treasure houses, immense quantities of gold and jewels being interred with them. It has been estimated by historians that Alexander the Great became the master of great hoards of gold, all of which, so far as is known, has vanished.

Franklin Set Style

When Eighteenth-century Paris was still wearing the picturesque three-cornered hat Benjamin Franklin came to represent the new republic of the United States, wearing on his head a queer thing derived from the steeple crowns of the Puritan Pilgrim fathers. Paris copied it and turned it into the cylinder which Christendom has worn ever since, says the Detroit News.

In the Eighteenth century when partisans of France and of Russia were fighting it out in Sweden the French faction wore hats, the Russians caps. The Middle ages, as a familiar ballad reminds us, knew a Pilgrim by his "cockle hat."

Warns of Overflow

By a simple device the problem of an overflowing ice-box pan is at once solved. All that is necessary, says the Scientific American, is to attach this alarm to any pan and, when the water rises to the level set, the float to which the alarm bell is attached is pushed up to the point where it will start the bell ringing and thus give ample warning. The pan can be emptied and the alarm rewound to act as a reminder on the next occasion.

Auto Pound Profitable

Poundmasters did not disappear with the banishment of the horse and wagon in favor of the automobile and truck. In San Antonio, Texas, there is an automobile poundmaster to look after forgotten and abandoned automobiles found on the city streets. In 1924 the pound made a profit of $2,062 after all expenses were paid, largely through payment made by automobile owners who had parked too long in some restricted streets.

Genial Bert Ward, an engineer on the New York Central Lines, passed away at his home in Hillsdale March 25, 1925. He was born in Hillsdale May 13, 1866, and began work as fireman on the old Lake Shore lines in 1899. He soon became engineer and at one time pulled the plug on the Ypsilanti branch. Many of our citizens will remember "Bert" for his ready stock of satire. One Thursday night in returning from the Hillsdale Fair his heavily overloaded train became "stuck" on a steep grade out this way. Passengers in rear cars rushed up ahead inquiring "Bert, are you stalled?" Mr, Ward pulled his cap down a notch and said nonchalantly, "Naw, just stopped to take a chew of tobacco."

Walter Camp Went The Way of All Great Athletes

Apropas of the death of Walter Camp we didn't quite finish our story last week, but we find that his untimely death was the result of too much athletics.

The first revolution in the gridiron suggested by Mr. Camp was the rule requiring five yards in three downs. That was in April 1883 and was the first step that led to the modern style of play. He also suggested the change to ten yards gain in four downs in 1603.

For twenty years Walter Camp has been a member of the highest football authority in the land.

It is to be regretted that a man seemingly in the prime of his physicial powers should fall before the grim reaper, but history repeats itself in athletics all the time. No regular devotee of the life can expect to live out his days—sooner or later the over-strain on his vitals particularly the heart, does the business, and one more athlete is added to the shadowy beyond.

We love athletics but we fail to see where the regular worker gains a crown of glory. Much better would it be if plain Walter Camp without his great football record could remain on this earth and go on instructing the future Lincolns Washingtons, Napoleons, and Paderewskis for his allotted span and be just a slight dabbler in athletics than to be a dead football coach! But then, there are ideas and ideas!

SERIOUS FIRE

Apropas of the recent fires at Pittsford comes the calamity on the Wilson Houseknecht farm east of Jonesville, resulting in the death of Mr. Houseknecht. About 2 o'clock Tuesday morning the Houseknecht family were aroused by the cry of fire and looking out the window discovered the barn in flames The screaming of horses in the burning building gave the alarm. Mrs. Houseknecht sent out numerous telephone calls and neighbors flocked to the scene but nothing could be done to save the barn, all of which, including the cider mill, were consumed, together with hay, grain, straw, fixtures, three horses and two head of cattle, and only by superhuman efforts were the house and garage saved. A small building 30 feet away containing large gasoline and oil tanks, was so hot the sides were charred. A traction engine, much valuable machinery and cider presses were ruined. The fire evidently started in the south-west corner of the cattle barn and gained great headway before it was seen. Evidence points strongly to incendiarism, and it is high time a vigilance committee was appointed to patrol the country-side, at night. A drum-head court, a rope and a tree by the roadside would be amply sufficient if the fire-bug were caught. Loss on this fire is estimated between three and four thousand dollars; insurance is small. This is the second disaster in the Houseknecht family within a few days, the large residence of C. George Houseknecht in the same neighborhood, having gone up in smoke. Here is a job for the State Police.

As a result of the excitement Wilson Houseknecht suffered a stroke of paralysis from which he did not rally.

SICK WOMEN ATTENTION!

Read this Remarkable Testimony Regarding Results from Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Norfolk, Virginia. — "If you only knew how many women and girls have taken your medicine by hearing my testimony, it would seem wonderful to you. Every day and every chance I have I advise some one to try it. It was in June, 1904, when I had given up to never get well, that I wrote to you. My husband went to the drugstore and brought the Vegetable Compound home to me. In a few days I began to improve and I have often taken it since. I am now passing through the Change of Life and still stick by it and am enjoying wonderful health. When I first started with your medicines I was a mere shadow. My health seemed to be gone. The last doctor I had said he would give me no more local treatments unless I went to the Hospital and was operated on. That was when I gave the doctors up. Now I am a healthy robust woman. I wish I could tell the world what a wonderful medicine Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is. I will be only too glad to answer letters from anywhere. I wish all sick women would take it."—Mrs. J. A. Jones, 317 Colley Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia.

Silent Airplane

By means of an improved exhaust and a propeller that operates on special gears, eliminating the usual whir, British engineers are said by Popular Mechanics Magazine to have devised an airplane that is practically noiseless without sacrifice of speed or lifting power. At the same time, by increased use of internal bracing, much of the noise caused by the wind rushing through the wires and spars has been avoided.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

German Parties Lining Up for Second and Crucial Election on April 26.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GERMANY failed to elect a President to succeed the late Herr Ebert, no one of the seven candidates receiving a majority vote, and now the party bosses are scheming various combinations for the "run-off" election that will be held on April 26. The best guess at this time is that the three candidates who will be offered to the people on that day will be Dr. Karl Jarres, right coalition; Doctor Marx, left coalition, and Herr Thaelmann, communists. Jarres, the monarchist coalition candidate in the first election, led all his rivals but Stresemann's Industrialist party is now trying to substitute another man for him. Braun, Socialist, was second, and Marx, Catholic Center, was third. Gen. Eric Ludendorff, supported by the Fascisti ultranationalists, ran last and received only about 300,000 votes.

The fight at the polls April 26 will really be between the republic and the monarchy, for the royalists, though they do not hope to change the form of government immediately even if they win the election, keep that in view for the not distant future. It is said they have completed their plans for putting the eldest son of former Crown Prince Frederick William on the throne in case a right coalition candidate is elected President, and that Frederick William himself favors this scheme. This prospect is worrying the republican press of Germany and also is causing a lot of anxiety in France.

BERLIN has been officially notified of the attitude of the allies toward the guarantee pact which Germany has offered. What England, Italy and Belgium have to say is not definitely known, but it is known that Premier Herriot has sent a series of specific questions and makes it plain that France insists that the eastern frontiers must be guaranteed the same as the Rhineland and that Germany must join the League of Nations. Herriot's firmness should do much to relieve the anxiety of Poland. Former Premier Poincare made an important speech warning France to reject Germany's proposal and to decline to reduce her armaments while Germany remains a potential danger.

France's position in regard to the new conference on limitation of armaments which President Coolidge desires to call is at this writing a matter of controversy. Dispatches from Paris say Ambassador Daeschner was instructed to tell the Washington government that France "could not permit any intrusion in her military forces until the security problem has been solved." On the other hand the embassy in Washington denied that M. Daeschner had received such instructions, and at both the White House and the State department it was asserted that no official communication concerning the proposed conference had been received from the French government. It was explained that Secretary of State Kellogg was still studying the situation and had not yet taken up with the President the matter of approaching other governments. Senator Borah, who as chairman of the senate foreign relations committee should know what he is talking about, says the plans for the conference should go forward and feels certain that reports of French opposition are exaggerated. Senator King of Utah, after calling on President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg, expressed the belief that the conference would be held in Washington before winter and that it would take up the reduction of land forces as well as of naval forces.

ETIENNE CLEMENTEL, French minister of finance, resigned Thursday night because of opposition in the senate to his plan to add 6,000,000,000 paper francs to the money circulation of the country for the purpose of aiding business. Senator de Monzie was selected to succeed him. He has been prominent in negotiations with Soviet Russia and opposes the government's Vatican policy. There were reports that the entire Herriot government would soon resign, in which case Painleve, Briand and Caillaux might be expected to come into power. France's financial condition is admittedly desperate.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER of Montana, indicted by a special federal grand jury in Washington for conspiracy to obtain fraudulently gas and oil permits on public lands in Montana, gave bail of $1,000 to appear for trial, and then issued a formal statement bitterly assailing the administration.

"The administration seems determined," Mr. Wheeler said, "to chastise every one who has the temerity to criticize or oppose the illegal practices of those in authority at Washington. A brief survey of political Washington during the last few years clearly indicates that I am not alone the subject of administration displeasure. Every public man who has raised his voice in protest against incompetence and corruption has been the subject of attack, the last being Senator Couzens of Michigan."

BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM MITCHELL, who incurred the resentment of certain of his superiors by advocating the creation of a separate air service and by his talks and writings concerning the relative importance of planes and battleships, thereby losing his position as assistant chief of the army air service, has been assigned as an air officer of the Eighth army corps with headquarters at San Antonio, Texas. The transfer takes effect April 26 and on the same date Mitchell automatically reverts to his former rank of colonel. Mitchell wanted to be assigned to the Sixth corps with headquarters at Chicago, but Secretary Weeks decided otherwise. "In selecting a post for General Mitchell," said he, "I took into consideration the fact that his rank as colonel in the air service entitles him to the best air post in the corps area. I understand he wanted to go to Chicago, but he did not apply formally for that post."

BY A vote of four to three the United States shipping board decided last week to sell to the Dollar steamship interests its five vessels now in the California-Orient service. The price obtained is $5,625,000. Commissioners Plummer, Thompson and Benson vigorously opposed the sale, pointing out that the price was $25,000,000 less than the original cost of the ships and $15,000,000 less than it would cost to build them at this time. The Pacific Mail Steamship company has been operating these ships for the board and was a bidder for their purchase. There are hints that this concern may try to prevent consummation of the deal and may carry the matter before congress at the next session.

THE week in the United States was marked by two huge financial transactions. In the first the Dodge Brothers Automobile company was sold to a syndicate of bankers headed by Dillon, Read & Co. of New York. The consideration was cash and though the exact sum was not made public it is known to be more than $175,000,000. The sellers were the widows of John and Horace Dodge. Some time ago it was learned they were tired of business cares and wished to sell their property, and at once there began a lively struggle among various interests to obtain it. Many bids were rejected and the final contest was between two groups of bankers, one headed by Dillon, Read & Co. and the other by J. P. Morgan & Co., who are largely interested in the General Motors corporation. The company is to be maintained as a separate organization, but an entirely new corporation will be formed, chartered in Michigan, with a capital of between $175,000,000 and $200,000,000. Its backbone will be an issue of first mortgage bonds, probably of about $100,000,000, the balance to be represented in common and preferred stocks, in which control of the organization will be vested. It is not unlikely that an offering to the public of some new Dodge Brothers company securities will be made soon.

It was announced Wednesday night that control of the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport company had passed to a group of interests including the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Blair & Co., Inc., and the Chase Securities corporation. Edward L. Doheny, chairman of the board of the Pan-American and a pioneer of the Mexican oil interests, signed the contract in New York for the sale of 501,000 shares of the voting stock of his company. The consideration was not stated but the present market value of the stock transferred is about $38,000,000. The shares are held by the newly organized Pan-American Eastern Petroleum corporation. This deal is the largest consolidation in the history of the oil industry. It gives the Standard Oil Company of Indiana an important rank not only in the oil industry in this country, but also in foreign markets. It acquired control not only of the Mexican properties of the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport company, its pipe lines and refineries, but also of its tanker fleet, consisting of 31 vessels with an aggregate deadweight of 272,500 tons and capable of transporting 1,800,000 barrels of crude oil. This tanker fleet is second in size to that of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

MORE systematic and effective efforts to enforce national prohibition are expected to follow the appointment of Assistant Secretary Lincoln C. Andrews as the head of all the prohibition activities of the Treasury department. He was given this post by Secretary Mellon after Assistant Secretary Moss and Prohibition Commissioner Haynes had indulged in a long controversy over the holding of the balance of power. The prohibition unit of the department and the "dry" work of the coast guard and customs divisions will be managed by Andrews. He was in the regular army 30 years, rising to brigadier general, and gained note as the reorganizer of the military police system of the army in France after the armistice.

WHETHER Federal Judge George W. English of the Eastern district of Illinois shall be impeached will not be known until December when the congressional subcommittee that has been investigating his acts reports to the full committee. After a lot of testimony had been heard Judge English took the stand in his own behalf. Some of the accusations of official misconduct he denied, others he sought to explain and to justify, and in excuse of others he pleaded ignorance of the law. The subcommittee adjourned but may hear some further evidence later.

THE sixth international neo-malthusian and birth control conference came to an end in New York last week after adopting a resolution providing for encouragement of large families among persons of superior stock.

"The conference believes," said the resolution, "that persons whose progeny give promise of being of decided value to the community should be encouraged to bear as large families, properly spaced, as they feel they feasibly can."

An international birth-control committee was appointed, with England, Scandinavia, Austria, Hungary, Holland, Germany, Japan, China, Mexico, Switzerland and America represented. The conference voted to raise a fund to pay the fine of 37,000 francs to save Eugene Humbert and his wife from further imprisonment in France for distributing birth-control pamphlets. The next international conference will be held in Geneva next August.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, it is announced, has selected White court, at Swampscott, Mass., for his summer vacation and he and his family will go there on June 13. The residence was leased recently by Frank W. Stearns, the President's close friend.

SECRETARY WEEKS has invited bids for the purchase of power developed by the Wilson dam at Muscle Shoals. This is in accordance with the plan of the army engineers to develop and sell the power pending final disposition of the project by congress. About July 1 the Wilson dam will begin the development of 100,000 horsepower daily. It is not expected that high rates of pay will be obtained since the contracts must be revocable by the government on 30 days' notice and will be of short duration.

Italian Women Fight for Right to Vote

Rome.—Angered by the suspicion that they have been the victims of a political game and indignant at the idea that the government has broken its promise to grant women suffrage in municipal elections, Italian proponents of equal political rights for men and women have begun a vigorous campaign to win public opinion to their side of the case.

The decision of committees of the senate and chamber of deputies, rejecting woman's suffrage as a step too inopportune to be taken at this time, was a bitter one for the suffragists.

It came but a short time after their hopes had been raised, as they had been never before, by the declaration of Premier Mussolini before a congress here of women from all parts of the globe that Italy intended to grant the vote to its women.

Government leaders explain their change of front as a necessary result of the present political situation, but the women refuse to believe this, especially since one government spokesman was quoted as saying: "Italy has suffered too much in the past from women rulers; it is not easy to forget the Borgias."

The National Association of Italian Women has issued a manifesto declaring that forty-eight nations have granted the vote to women and that Italy runs the risk of being the last to take the step, thereby creating false ideas abroad about social and political conditions south of the Alps

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Senate Approves State's Buying D. G. H. & M. Railway Property

Lansing—By a unanimous vote, the Senate passed the Howarth Resolution declaring the intent of the state to purchase the property of the Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee Railroad. The vote was taken after the bill had been reported out of the Committee on Rules and Resolutions with a recommendation it be passed. The vote which brought the resolution out of committee with recommendation of passage was unanimous, although it is understood that Senator George G. Hunter of St. Johns, chairman, was opposed to the recommendation, as was one other member. Finding themselves outnumbered, they agreed to make the vote unanimous.

Split On Rapid Transit Bill

After lengthy discussion members of the Wayne delegation in the house and spokesmen for the Detroit rapid transit commission were still disagreed as to what financial limitations should be incorporated in the new enabling act that has been drafted at the governor's suggestion and which it is proposed to introduce in place of the bill that the governor had threatened to veto because of belief that it was unconstitutional. The legislators plan for financial restriction of the rapid transit commission roughly would provide for the raising of a $60,000,000 fund and the building of approximately 12 miles of railway.

Solons Indulge In Horseplay

The roguish atmosphere of April Fool's Day provided self-entertainment for 30 members of the Michigan state senate. Senator Harvey E. Penney of Saginaw, and his anti-gas station bill were the objects of the sprightly remarks. While the boyish capers were enacted into legislative history 30 members of the senate, seven newspaper correspondents and an unlimited number of senate employes looked dubiously at cigars passed through the chamber by Senator Walter Truettner, of Bessemer. The cigars failed miserably to explode.

Primary School Bill Passes

A new system of distributing the primary school fund was enacted into law, save for the Governor's signature, by the legislature. The Bohn-Carter-Turner measure, providing that 5 per cent of the fund be set aside for distribution to the poorer counties under the so-called Escanaba plan, passed by the House by a vote of 83 to 6. It had previously passed the Senate. The change will permit the apportionment to the counties which need State aid in the most of about $750,000 a year, in addition to their regular quota of the fund.

Prohibition Enforcement Cut

That probition enforcement in Detroit and other parts of Michigan will be curtailed this year was indicated when the senate finance committee reported out an appropriation bill allowing only $150,000 for this branch of law enforcement. At the same time it was announced that the department of public safety is to be reorganized under the direction of state administrative board.

State Fair Number Approved

The appointment of John W. Smith, of Port Huron, as a member of the board of managers of the State Fair was confirmed by the Senate on presentation by Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck. Several other appointments to minor boards, made by the Governor since the adjournment of the 1923 Legislature, were referred to the Committee on Executive Business.

Senate Passes Courts Bill

The Callender-Wood-Darin County Court Bill, aimed to effect a reorganization of Justice Courts in counties of 100,000 or more inhabitants, and pointed particularly at Detroit, passed the Senate by a vote of 22 to 8. The measure is now in the House. The new bill changes the name of the court to the County Court, and makes it a state institution.

Finance Measure Amended

Senator Charles E. Greene, of Richmond, asked a reconsideration of the vote by which his bill to license and regulate finance corporations was passed by the Senate. The reconsideration was granted and Mr. Greene presented an amendment to the bill, specifically exempting real estate companies and private banks from the operation of its provisions. In this stage, the bill was repassed by a unanimous vote.

Governor Calls Conference

Gov. Alex. J. Groesbeck took a hand in the legislative appropriations tangle when he called a conference of the Senate Finance Committee, the House Ways and Means Committee, Lieut.- Gov. George Welsh, Speaker Fred B. Wells and Henry Croll, Jr., director of the budget, in the offices of the State Administrative Board in the State Office Building. The immediate cause of the conference, it was reported, was the question of rebuilding the State Sanitorium at Howell.

Highway Amendment Passed

The Kirby Bill to amend the Highway Laws by eliminating the sections providing for the payment of state rewards to townships and counties for road construction, was passed by the house by a vote of 58 to 30. It would do away with a system which has been in effect since 1909, but which is now considered out of date with the centralizing of construction and control of trunk line highways under the state highway commissioner and administrative board

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Owosso—The Consumers Power Co. is rebuilding its entire system here, in anticipation of the city becoming one of 20,000 population within a few years.

Grand Rapids—Vernon Nederveld, 9-year-old son of Gerrit Nederveld, was injured fatally when he fell from a hay mow through to a cement floor, at the farm of Peter Dewys, in Walker township.

Jackson—Fire, starting in the town hall at Grass Lake, destroyed the structure and endangered the business district of the town. The loss to the building is estimated at $5,000, covered by insurance.

Detroit—Steamer Eastern States, of the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation company, has sailed for Cleveland on the opening voyage of the season. Over 250 passengers boarded the steamer for the pening voyage.

Bay City—Though it voted to instruct the superintendent of schools to give preference to single teachers, the Bay City Board of Education has voted against banning married teachers, a step for which there had been strong agitation.

Ypsilanti—Joseph Sackman, former State Trooper and for some time stationed at Wayne, has joined the Ypsilanti police force as a traffic officer. Last year Ypsilanti had but one motorcycle officer, but this season there will be two and possibly more.

Sault Ste. Marie—Water has been let into the American and Canadian locks at this port in preparation for the coming of the first boats. There is no ice in St. Mary's river between the two Soos. The ice in Mud and Hay Lakes is still about 15 inches thick but is soft.

Lansing—A total estimated income for the year of $18,000,000 from the gasoline and weight tax laws was the figure arrived at by the department of state following the issuance of its quarterly report. When the highway finance plan was adopted by the legislature estimates ran as high as $23,000,000 or $24,000,000.

Ann Arbor—The University of Michigan during the preceding year cut down on maintenance of its buildings away below the point of good business. Still, it has a deficit of $200,000. All this is due to lack of sufficient money, and that was caused by an arbitrary limitation on its revenue from the mill tax.

Muskegon—Circuit Judge John Vanderwerp has issued a permanent injunction restraining the city from paying Justices Robert E. Gale and J. E. Turner $400 a month increase in salary. The suit was brought by John Bennick, a taxpayer, on the grounds that the salaries had been increased during their term of office.

Cadillac—They lived together and they were buried together. Such epitomizes the lives of two old cronies, mill employes for the same company for 30 years. Frank Victor, 57 years old, died March and his room mate, Adolph Ericson, 63 years old, died late rthe same day. Each succumbed to pneumonia, following an attack of influenza.

Lansing—Judge William F. Steinkohl, of Municipal Court, notified the city council that he is not satisfied with the salary fixed in the 1925 budget it remains the same as when he was elected, $2,400. The council refused an increase of $600 when it declined to raise the salaries of any elective officers. As a result Judge Steinkohl may resign.

Mt. Clemens—Little hope was expressed by physicians at the St. Joseph's Sanitarium here for the recovery of Mrs. Wesley Mull, or her five-year-old son, Wilson, whom she saved from instant death at the risk of her own life by throwing him from the track of a Port Huron bound interurban car at Roseville, on Gratiot avenue between Detroit and Mt. Clemens.

Bay City—"The Detroit & Mackinac railroad has not given any thought to the subject of discontinuing any of its passenger train service," said John McCray, of East Tawas, assistant to the general manager, in explaining why the company had asked the Michigan public utilities commission for permission to operate a bus line between this city and Alpena.

Bad Axe—Joseph Schwalm, in accepting the office of city treasurer, said that he would be willing to accept a lower salary than the office pays providing the difference was turned over to the firemen for a fire hall fund. The amount, $600, was placed in the hands of the city council by the firemen. An amount equal to the sum presented by the fire department will be added yearly to the fund to erect a new fire hall.

Lansing—Upon the request of Mrs. John J. Cox, of Ann Arbor, chairman of the conservation committee of the Michigan Federation of Women's Clubs, for an extension of privileges to the Boy Scouts of Michigan, the state conservation commission offered the state's game and forest reserves as free ground for the establishment of summer camps for the scouts. Mrs. Cox, appearing for the Federation, asked that the scouts be given the privilege of studying the state's program of reforestation at first hand.

Ypsilanti—Mrs. Edith C. Munger, of Hart, was re-elected president of the Michigan Audubon Society at the closing session of the annual two-day meeting here. T. L. Hankinson, professor of zoology at the Michigan State Normal College here, was elected vice-president to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Arthur D. Moore, of South Haven. Walter Hastings of South Lyon, was re-elected second vice-president, and Miss Geneva Smith, of Ypsilanti was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Gas Preserves Fish

The use of carbon-dioxide gas refrigeration instead of ice in shipping a consignment of 15,000 pounds of fresh fish from Halifax to Montreal was so successful that when the cargo was unpacked ten days later the fish was found to be free from odor and the natural color unchanged. The gas is carried in cylinders in refrigerator cars, and the system is expected to extend the market for fresh fish.—New York World.

What Pretty Girl Did for Sick Stomach

Miss E. Rich of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I don't know what the cause was, but every few days my stomach would feel all bloated up with gas, my appetite was poor and I felt sick to my stomach—to say nothing of headaches.

"I never thought of using Carter's Little Liver Pills until nothing seemed to help. After using Carter's I felt relieved at once—and now as soon as my stomach 'talks' back I answer with Carter's and have the last word."

Better Homes Truck To Tour State Again

A special "Better Homes" truck equipped with a variety of farm and home conveniences suitable for demonstration purposes, will tour several Michigan counties during the coming summer, according to announcement made here this week by the agricultural engineering department at M. A. C. sponsors of the campaign.

A year ago this same demonstration train covered 22 counties in the southern part of the state, making 71 separate stops. As a result of the success of that trip, the decision to tour again this summer has been made, it is understood.

Starting in Saginaw County on May 18, the tour will reach Midland, Arenac, Ogenaw, Tuscola, Huron, Sanilac and St. Clair counties on its first swing, which ends on June 12. Later in the summer an itinerary of counties in the western part of the state will be covered.

The truck, which becomes a giant demonstration booth, will carry electric lighting plants, a variety of farm water systems, a completely equipped farm bath room, gas engines, a radio receiver, a concrete mixer and other items of home conveniences. O, E Robey, extension specialist at the college, and two assistants, will "man" the truck.

Erection of a Michigan septic tank at each of the stops on the tour, the forms used to be left in the neighborhood for future building, will constitute one of the most important features of the demonstration train. Local county agricultnral agents are completing arrangements for the stops to be made in their territory.

New Ruling on Mail Matter

Evidently the postoffie system was not paying out very satisfactorily as rates on nearly everything except first class letters and postal cards has been raised. Postmaster VanWert hands us the following summary of the changes effective April 1st, 1925. You will be somewhat surprised when you send money orders or bulky packages through the mails:

Mailable matter is now divided into four classes—1st, written matter; 2nd, periodical publications; 3rd, merchandise and printed and other mailable matter, except that of the first and second classes, not exceeding eight ounces in weight; 4th, merchandise and printed and mailable matter, except that of the first and second classes, exceeding eight ounces in weight.

The rate of postage on private mailing cards (post cards) shall be two cents each. They must be approximately the size of the stamped postal card now in general use in the United States. The regulation government cards will remain one cent each.

The letter postage remains the same as at present. Second class rates affect only publishers and newsdealers and is figured on a zone basis. Third class includes all matter not in the first two classes up to eight ounces in weight, thus bringing small parcel post matter in this class. The rate is 1½ cents for each two ounces or fraction thereof, except that on books, catalogues, seeds, cuttings, bulbs, etc., not exceeding eight ounces shall be one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof.

Typewriting and carbon and letter press copies thereof are now classed as first class mail.

Facsimile copies of handwriting or typewriting produced by a mechanical process such as the printing press, mimeograph, multigraph etc., shall be treated as matter of the third or fourth class, according to weight, providing they are presented for mailing in a minimum number of 20 identical unsealed copies. If mailed elsewhere or in less number the first class rate shall apply.

Mail matter of the 4th class shall be in excess of eight ounces, and not exceeding 70 pounds for delivery in the first, second or third zones, or not exceeding 50 pounds for delivery in the other zones. Nor shall the package be of greater size than 84 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employe or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter, nor of perishable nature within reasonable period required for transportation and delivery.

The zone rate on the fourth class matter is not changed except that a service charge of two cents for each parcel (except upon parcels collected on rural routes). Whenever in addition to the regular postage 25 cents extra in stamps be affixed with the words "Special Handling" written or printed thereon, such parcel shall receive the same expeditious handling, transportation and delivery as is accorded first class mail.

Sealing a package of third or fourth class matter without a printed label stating that the package may be opened for postal inspection makes it first class with postage at two cents per ounce. The registry fee for first class mail indemnified for $50 or less will be be 15 cents; over $50 and less than $100 is 20 cents. By paying an additional fee of 3 cents a receipt will be returned to the sender upon delivery of the mail.

The insurance fee shall be 5 cents for indemnification not to exceed $5; 8 cents for up to $25; 10 cents for up to $50 and 25 cents up to $1. The fees for insurance are in excess of the regular postage. An additional fee of 3 cents will bring you a receipt upon the delivery of the parcel. Parcel post matter may be sent collect on delivery between money order offices in the U. S. and its possessions, except to the Philippine Islands. The fees are 12 cents for collections not exceeding $10; 15 cents not over $50; 25 cents not over $1. Both postage and fee shall be paid by affixing stamps to the parcel. The C. O. D fee shall also cover the insurance fee up to the value to be collected

Money orders shall not be issued for more than $100, and the fees shall be: Not exceeding $2.50, 5 cents. From $2.50 to $5.00, 7 cents From $5.00 to $10.00, 10 cents. From $10.00 to $20, 12 cents. From $20 to $40, 15 cents. From $40 to $60, 18 cents. From $6 to $30, 20 cents. From $80 to $100, 22 cents.

Reminiscences of An Old Whaler

We also had paddles which we lost but saved three buckets for baling which were kept busy to keep the boat afloat. We held the whale with a harpoon which I have now also two pieces of black bone about three feet long and a piece of hide from the top of his head. These may be seen by anyone who will come to my house. I did not need them to remember him by. I was sitting in the water three hours in that climate with more clothes on than I ever wore here, before the ship got to us and we got on dry clothes. It was the cause of a spinal trouble of which I never fully recovered and I was forced to change my occupation. We had the whale tied to the bow with the anchor chain arround the tail, his body lying along the ship's side. We made fast to the head then cut it off and raised it on deck We cut the tongue loose and let it float away for food for the fish.

You often hear a man tell about what a tongue a woman has, but Oh my! You should see a whale's tongue. They will weigh a ton or more according to size of the whale. This whale was what we would call a small one, only 50 barrels of oil from the body back of the head. We cut the head off about a foot back of the mouth and 6 inches back of the eyes. The tongue was not less than 15 feet long, 6 feet wide and 2½ feet thick when the head lay right side up, jaw flat on deck, 7 feet high and 9 feet between the eyes, there I had before me a straight wall of meat except the backbone I did not get the size of it. I could easily get my arm in the throat above the elbow. Any large whale would be over 10 feet in diameter at the neck. I had found out the size of a fifty barrel whale's throat and the only way it could be done was to have the head on on deck; the throat was lying in its natural condition. There was no trouble to get any measurements desired and yet the most important point needed I could not get and no one ever has got it. How much is the throat capable of expanding? All whales swallow their food whole except the Sperm What object would God have in creating the largest monster in the sea and give him a throat that would compel him to feed on minnows and he would have to scoop fast and not stop to rest to supply a body of that size. Scientists say what we know of a thing is by comparison. I will go by their rule, we will compare a whale's throat with the throat of a small grass snake. The whale's neck is 10 feet or more in diameter, the snake's ¾ inch or less. The snake will swallow a toad more than twice the size of its neck.

I believe a whale swallows many fish that are larger than a large man. I don't believe it was necessary for God to prepare a fish for the job. I don't consider it a miracle to put Jonah in a whale's stomach but it was a miracle to put him on shore alive, giving him a chance to repent of the sin of disobedience.

This miracle was in a warm country. The whale was probably a large Humpback which are found in those waters. The account of it being recorded in the Bible is positive proof that it is true. Only a person seeing a whale can imagine its size. I will give you a starting point for a guess as to its size. The blubber or fat lies the same as the fat on a hog. It is 5 to 15 inches thick according to the size and age of the whale. Now imagine taking a layer of fat 15 inches thick from the outside of a whale, back of the head and trying it out and get 317 barrels of oil.

If your imagination is correct as to the size of the whale's carcass you will have the size of the largest whale ever captured. It is on record in the office of a ship owner in the city of New Bedford Mass. It was caught in East Greenland many years ago and was a Wright whale. The largest Sperm whale was caught in the South Atlantic near the island of St. Helena and made 212 barrels of oil. Late years the size of whales caught run from 50 to 200 barrels of oil. On account of being hunted so much they do not have time to get full size. There are less vessels in the business but better facilities for catching and handling them. Now don't think you know all there is about the whaling business. If I should explain all the minor details you would get more than twice as much as you have here. Without spinning any sailor yarns I will say to any young man having an attack of sea fever if you have a home stay there and be as useful as possible. Try and make the world better for your having lived in it.

Many people never heard of Ambergris. It is taken from a sick whale and is a stoppage in the stomach. Experienced whaleman can tell from the looks of a whale if there is any in him. There has been several thousand dollars worth taken from one whale. It sells for its weight in gold or more and is used in the manufacture of the most expensive perfumes. Some men have been whaling for years and never found any of it.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON "SUCKER LISTS"

"Ever since I bought that $500 electric company bond, Aunt Emmy," said Helen, "I have been pestered by all sorts of bond salesmen to buy other things. I should like to invest again, but I am bewildered. Every day or so I see something that sounds so good. But I don't know what to do."

"That reminds me," said Aunt Emmy, fishing through her workbasket and taking out some clippings from her needle book. "I have an article from a magazine that will help. The writer gave some questions to make a bond salesman answer in writing and said that if the salesman were on the square he would answer the questions satisfactorily. Here they are," and Aunt Emmy began to read:

"'1. Will my bank say that the house which is offering the security is reputable?

"'2. Give an exact description of the security?

"'3. What provision is made for paying off this and other securities of the company?

"'4. What is the nature of the business of the company?

"'5. How much of a margin did the company earn annually over all its depreciation and interest charges for each of the last ten years?

"'6. What dividends has the company paid on its stock for each of the last ten years?

"'7. What are the company's total assets and liabilities and has it sufficient funds to carry on its business?

"'8. What are the experience and reputation of the men controlling and operating the company?'

"Then the next thing to do is to go to your banker and let him check up all this information for you," added Aunt Emmy. "Now that you know your name is on a 'sucker list' be doubly careful."

"What's a 'sucker list,' Aunty?"

"It is a list of the names of people who have purchased securities or inquired about them. Such lists are bought by so-called investment brokerage houses all over the country. Lots of bad securities are sold through unscrupulous brokers writing to the names on those lists."

"Oh, that's it, is it?" exclaimed Helen. "I suppose the poor people are flattered at getting such letters. I know I was."

"Just so," Aunt Emmy said, with a smile.—Anne B. Aymes.

HOW BANKERS HELP

Seventeen students are securing an education in the Georgia State College of Agriculture through financial aid which the State Bankers Association is giving. In 1923 the Association increased its annual dues so as to contribute toward the education of boys and girls in club work who could not otherwise receive a higher education. This year, therefore, $1,000 was put into a trust fund with the College to be loaned to students who need help. It was placed in what is known as the "Ex-President's Fund," a fund which has been receiving voluntary contributions from the retiring presidents of the Bankers Association since 1915. In amount the fund is now $7,153. Fifty students have been helped prior to this year, making a total of sixty-seven.

In Shabbytown

IN Shabbytown they do not care if things look seedy everywhere. They have no pep, they've lost their grip, they simply sit around and yip, in envy's tones, of Glossyville, the shining village on the hill. Oh, Shabbytown is punk and gray, and it shows symptoms of decay, and strangers passing through remark, "It surely dates back to the Ark." "Clean Up and Paint Up" makes men frown along the streets of Shabbytown. A can of paint makes no appeal to this bum village, down at heel; the people think there is no sense in going to so much expense; so things are always going down, and getting worse in Shabbytown. It always gives my soul a thrill when I arrive in Glossyville. The town looks like a blooming bride; the people take a hearty pride in making things look clean and bright, and in their labors take delight. They're lavish with the helpful paint, selecting colors chaste or quaint, and decorating every shack; thus warding off decay's attack, and making all the buildings look like buildings read of in a book. And strangers, when they see the town, say, "Here we'll come and settle down, and raise us nineteen kids apiece, and live and die as slick as grease." This happy burg goes right ahead, while Shabbytown is prone and dead.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

"The Juvenile Jazz To Jail"

The preachers are not the only ones who are disturbed over the alleged immorality of youth. Under the above caption The Literary Digest of March 26 calls in a host of witnesses from the courts and shows that the preachers are not fools after all. The judges of America are coming to the aid of the church, and it is high time that the guardians of youth get together The Digest starts a two page discussion with these words:

American parents can not fail to be disturbed by the terrible precocity in crime which, even from a casual reading of the daily papers appears to be the distinguishing feature of this great age of jazz. The flouting of the law and of the ordinary conventions and decencies of society by the generation now growing gray, has set an example, court records and newspapers show which the cradle itself is learning to follow, with exact precision aud deadly effect.

The 'teen age totes its own; it is saturated with the sophistries which usually distinguish adults morally gone to seed; from the youth of the land the jails and prisons are recruiting as victims those who should still be playing marbles or dressing dolls.

It would be squandering time and space to recite details with which every newspaper reader is familiar. Every one can recall reading of rum parties engaged in by high school boys and girls, of young murderers, thieves and bandits brought to bay—a sickeningly large number.

More than one judge in the great criminal courts of New York City has pointed out that modern criminal processes are continually dealing with children in their early and middle 'teens. The report of the Prison Commissioner of the of the State of New York notes with horror that a large percentage of the criminals of today are mere boys and girls.

The papers have been full of high school escapades, excesses and not a few tragedies, last of all the stirring of Wyandotte over the alleged sale of liquor to its students A good many communities would do well to stop complaining about their taxes and find out how things are really going with their youth. The few items picked up by the press tell the story of other possibilities that are still in embryo under the surface.

Here is a chance for a volume of comment, but we content ourselves with a "few feeble remarks." Fundamentally, the present situation is possible because of lack of team work by youth's best friends, the school, the home and the church Aiming at the same goal, we thoughtlessly trip one another up in our efforts, and disaster follows.

The home is lax and lazy. It is easier to let the children go "out" for the evening than it is to plan a worth-while evening at home. If they stay at home, it is liable then to be a case of following the path of least resistance, and wasting the evening, or worse, on cards. Strange how this exiled game is working its way back in the homes formerly quarantined against this gaming pest, this ancient infection that, like the flu, breaks out with regularity.

The church today is the least guilty, for it is making the finest attempt to reach young life against the fiercest odds in its history. In the city it has a scant chance at youth of school age. A pastor of another denomination recently voiced the sentiment of scores of our own pastors, when he said: "I can not get the high school folks out to anything. Their nights are pre-empted, either for the study or the social life of the school. Sometimes we get a group out for a supper, but it is a touch and go affair at the best. I can not even find time to train a class for Easter and even Sunday night is now utilized for getting Monday's lessons.

Ministers everywhere speak with deepest resentment over the unwarranted encroachment of the modern social and recreational life of the school. The pity is that this modern program of our schools is put on in perfectly good faith. It is a new experimentation, suggested by modern educational leaders who are so enthusiastic over some passing fad as to ignore the abiding effort of the church. If only these experiments could be tried out on a race of guinea pigs, nobody would kick, but the plot thickens when the stunts are tried on children. Nor does it help as much as it ought to know that we are being wounded in the house of a friend. Some of our best educators worry over some modern programs. If they had children in school they would worry more.

FATAL NON-CO-OPERATION

What is the result of the non cooperation? It takes the leadership of youth away from the home, the church and the school, and gives it largely over to the gang, the scientific name of the group of boys or girls, or both, with which your children are identified.

Ever see it in figures? The church is lucky if it gets two hours of your boy's time in a week. You are with him how many hours? Counting meal time, do you have him ten hours a week out of his waking 112 hours? Just figure it for yourself.

The school authorities have him from 25 to 40 hours a week. When you consider that at certain ages, a parent's influence is low and a teacher's influence is high, it seems only fair to ask the school to bear its fair share of responsibility for present day troubles.

Annual House Cleaning Day

'Tis time when the intricacies of the back yard appeal to the lady of the house and she getteth the garden rake and hieth herself toward the ash heap. Wonder what we will have to announce this spring in the way of new paint ups and house repairs? The village is not especially dirty; there is no such volume of offal and garbage to dispose of as cities may have to complain of, but we have a certain amountoffeffete matter which should be taken care of in the spring time such as old tin cans, old worn rubbers and shoes, stove pipe and discarded kitchen utensils, and the sooner you citizens make up your mind to remove it the better. The board of health has told you what it harbors. You know from personal experience that vermin, and disease lurk in such things. They are non sanitary and non-lookable and you don't want them laying around anyhow. Let's just get after the stuff pretty soon and no doubt the village council will fall in line directly and furnish free passage of your rubbish to the junk yard. We laugh (we can't help it) when we note the old nondescript vehicles parked in some rear premises. We used to think the automobile was a machine which only the ideal rich. While the price lists of new autos seems to stay right up where they were a few years ago, yet the used car keeps degenerating until today it is possible to get a machine which is running on its last hundred mile for practically the price of removal in Detroit. In no other institution about our country is so much money lost as in these "gas buggies" and nobody cares a rap. We have set a pace and we are living up to it—you bet. When a man (rich or poor) pays $1,000 for an automobile and drives it one month where at its value has dropped to $400 we'd say he is slightly extravagent and he is, but its all in the life. Nobody will ever be the poorer for it—any more than they would 20 years ago by owning a $200 horse. The whole scale is adjusted to work in unison and when one little poor man moves up the scale one notch another takes his place and if he disposes of a good machine for $400 some poorer man makes a little profit off his misfortune and buys what looks to him a palatial rig, and so on down until the last man who junks the car has really got his money out of it. In other words every machine sold works out its full value in several different hands and keeps the money in circulation. Now to get back to the house cleaning proposition we want to say a little paint and a little elbow grease go a long way on life's pathway. Let's paint up, pay up, clean up and stay up.

Farmers Paying Too Much For New Clover

Reports that farmers in some sections of Michigan are paying too much for strains of sweet clover known as Early Crystal Dwarf have reached the crops department at M. A. C. recently. Prices for this seed are said to have ranged as high as $30 a bushel in some instances.

This seed may be obtained from reliable sources, in large quantities, at $9.30 a bushel, says Prof. C. R. Megee of the M. A. C. crops staff, in discussing the reports of "thirty dollar" prices. The ordinary strain is quoted at $9.00 a bushel. Farmers should not pay more than fifty cents premium a bushel for Early Crystal Dwarf clover seed.

This strain of sweet clover has been known for some time, having gained considerable prominence in Grundy County, Station and under Michigan conditions has been found to be from ten days to two weeks earlier in maturity than the white or ordinary sweet clover. Due to its dwarf habit, it yields only from two thirds to three fourths as much forage per acre as common sweet clover. The stem is a little finer, however, and it may give a little better quality of hay. As a pasture crop, however, it is not likely to prove as popular as the ordinary sweet clover due to its earlier maturity.

The Early Crystal Dwarf or Grundy County White Blossom Sweet Clover is an excellent seed producer. The seed ripens more uniformly; consequently larger yields may be secured. This sweet clover may well be used under Michigan conditions, but exorbitant prices should not be paid for the seed.

Pins Get Seats at WLS Theater

WOOD SHED THEATRE
5 PINS

When the mythical Woodshed Theater was built over radio by Ford Rush and Glenn Rowell, the "Lullaby Boys" of WLS, the Sears-Roebuck station, Chicago, they announced to their radio audience that "reserved seats" in the air would be reserved on payment of two pins. They did not specify the kind, so thousands of pins came by mail to WLS Woodshed Theater—small pins, safety pins of all sizes and even clothes pins. The biggest pin, especially made, was 36 inches long and about two inches thick. This was engraved in honor of Ford and Glenn, and was presented by the members of the Kenosha Club, of the Nash Motor Company, Kenosha, Wis. Up to date more than 5,000 pins have been received for the Woodshed Theater's mythical auditorium. Besides the program put on by Ford and Glenn, many of the Lullaby Tots, members of the WLS Lullaby Hour club, produce plays of a juvenile type, in which the boys and girls are the actors and actresses.

"WLS Unlimited" in Action

One long note of a locomotive whistle—it floats across the valleys, echoing down the corn rows, over America's waving wheat fields, to lose itself in the haze of the hills. There is a chugging of a powerful engine and a crunching of steel wheels; the bell rings. A long, softly lighted train, filled with song and laughter, slips into the darkness.

"WLS, Chicago. The WLS Unlimited is starting on its daily transcontinental trip over the trackless paths of the air. The first stop will be Clinton, Iowa." It's George Hay announcing—the "Solemn Old Judge," engineer-announcer for the Sears-Roebuck station. WLS is the only strictly agricultural broadcasting station in the world. Twice each day it carries a farm message, train fashion, into every nook and corner of rural America. Assisting the "Solemn Old Judge" in the "sound production" are Ford Rush, who acts as the "engine bell" and Glenn Rowell, who "makes the wheels go round."

She nodded happily. "I am ashamed to feel so gay when you are unhappy," she said.

"I am not unhappy, Joan," he answered. "I thought over everything last night, and I see now that you were right. I shall go back. Of course I shall go back. I shall regain what I have lost, and I shall face my enemies and beat them."

At ten o'clock the horse was harnessed and the drive back began.

At first Joan, seated at her lover's side, breathed in the mountain air, the sense of freedom, the scent of the pines, the joy of the sunlight. Then the peaks began to tower above them. The dulled valley air struck something from her joy, but not too much for her to dream. She looked fondly at Lancaster, who drew her hand into his.

"I am going back to win," he said again.

Later the sun went into clouds. The air grew moister, the hills inclosed them, the familiar landmarks began to reappear. And now something of Lancaster's despondency of the evening before came over Joan. And again, as if sensing her mood, he reiterated:

"I am going back to fight and win, my dear."

But when the institute came into sight at last the long, gaunt building cast its chill over the girl's heart. In contrast with the mountain village Lancaster was depressing and lonely. And Joan was conscious of one gripping fear. Suppose that Myers had returned!

She understood now how Lancaster had felt the evening before when he said he would never go back. It was like plunging out of the sunlight into a dark mountain pool.

The matron came forward as the buggy stopped. Joan looked at her in terror. But her face was placid enough, and she was able to read in it the secretary's continued absence.

"Dr. Lancaster, there was a telephone message for you a few minutes ago from Avonmouth," she said.

Lancaster leaped from the buggy and helped Joan down. "I'll be with you in a few moments," he said, throwing the reins over the hitching post.

He went into the house. His step was firm, his demeanor unruffled; the matron, who followed him, seemed undisturbed. But already everything was changed. The black shadow of Myers seemed to loom up until it overspread the institute again. Joan paced the porch in fear which gathered strength each moment that Lancaster failed to return. When at last she saw him coming her suspense was unbearable.

She looked at him in mute fear as he laid his hand carelessly upon her shoulder.

"I have to go to Avonmouth at once," he said. "I have no choice in the matter. It is a patient who must undergo an operation—my operation—within twelve hours. It is fortunate that we have the buggy, because I shall just have time to catch the afternoon train and get into Avonmouth at midnight."

Then he looked at her white face and read the fear in it. "If you tell me to stay, I'll say," he said.

"And the patient?" whispered Joan.

"Will die. No, of course I shall go. Nothing could keep me from going, not even you, my dear. But you would not have me stay."

"You are right. Yes, of course you must go. But I am afraid," said Joan. "I am afraid of Myers."

He started, as if he, too, had been thinking of the secretary. "But the man can't harm me, dear," he said.

"The message came from him!" cried Joan in fear.

Lancaster looked away. But, when she repeated the question he answered, "No."

"He is at Avonmouth. Is he not there?" she asked.

"Well, Joan, I think he is," said Lancaster reluctantly. "But he may not be. I only know that the message was not from him."

"It was not from the hospital? Not from MacPherson?"

"It was from a man connected with the hospital," said Lancaster. "But it was not from MacPherson and not from Myers, and it did not mention Myers' name. Why, my dear, you mustn't give way to nerves now that I am losing mine. It is a simple request for me to operate tomorrow."

She pulled herself together. "Of course you must go, John," she said again. She put her arms about his neck. "Dear, if you should see that man, you will not fall into any trap that he may set for you?" she asked. "You are so strong, you will not let him trample on you? You are yourself again, and you will remain so for my sake?"

"Never fear!" he answered cheerfully. "I am not going to take morphine again. Why, I shall have none with me, my dear Joan, and I should have no opportunity to buy any, even if I wanted to. I shall operate perhaps as soon as I reach the hospital, and return on the morning train. I may not even go to my house at all."

"I am not afraid that you will take morphine," said Joan. "But you will not see Myers?"

"Not if I can help it. He can't come to the hospital, and I don't think he will dare to lie in wait for me at the station. If he does, he'll find me a tough customer to kidnap in broad daylight. There, my dear, be calm and sensible, and when I return I shall tell you everything that you must know."

He kissed her and hurried in to pack his suitcase. He came out in a few moments and placed it in the buggy. "Good-by, Joan, dearest Joan," he said. "And you will not hint at our engagement to Mrs. Fraser while I am gone? I have very special reasons for this."

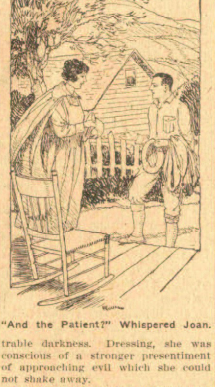
She shook her head and laughed, and returned his kiss, and all the while her heart grew heavier. And long after the buggy had disappeared from sight she stood upon the porch looking after it.

Chapter IX

That night was sleepless as the last, but all the joy that had filled her heart in the hill cabin was gone. She lay awake, listening to the rain that pattered on the roof, thinking and wondering. How strange her life had become, and how far away the old landmarks were! She had fought for a man's soul in darkness and snatched it into light, and now the darkness seemed closing about her again. And she could only hope and wait through endless hours.

In vain she tried to tell herself that it was only an ordinary summons. On the face of it, the call was natural; but Joan's instinct told her that there was more behind it. Myers had not surrendered his prey so easily as he had assumed to do. And Lancaster had been evasive—to spare her, perhaps, but evasive. And her task now was only to wait.

At eight she rose. She imagined that he must have finished the operation some time before, and be at the station, or on his way there, but her soul could not go out to his across the distance, and their communion seemed to be cut short by the same impenetrable darkness. Dressing, she was conscious of a stronger presentiment of approaching evil which she could not shake away.



"And the Patient?" Whispered Joan.

It was a gloomy day, and the rain came down in torrents. About eleven o'clock Doctor Jenkins arrived in his buggy and inquired for Lancaster. He seemed surprised to learn that he had gone to Avonmouth.

He was preparing to return but Joan felt the need of speech with him irresistible. She did not mean to cross-examine him, she only wanted to shake off the feeling that Lancaster had passed out of her reach by speaking to one of his associates. She hardly knew the purpose of her accosting Jenkins until she saw the look of concern upon his face.

"Miss Wentworth, you aren't well!" he exclaimed. "You have been overdoing it!"

"No, Doctor Jenkins, but—Doctor Lancaster has gone into Avonmouth—"

"Yes, Miss Wentworth. But he won't come to any harm there, thanks to you. You've taught me a thing or two about morphine patients, Miss Wentworth," he went on, in his polite, complimentary fashion. "I never saw anyone get well as fast as Doctor Lancaster, nor any nurse that could handle a situation as you did," he added.

"Yes, but it was not really morphine, you know," said Joan, and then she almost gaped in astonishment. What had she said? Why had she said it?

Doctor Jenkins was staring at her too. "Not morphine, you say, Miss Wentworth?" he stammered.

"I mean, the symptoms weren't those of morphine poisoning," said Joan.

"Oh, well, Miss Wentworth, everybody takes it in a different way," he answered. "Yes, I reckon it was morphine right enough. They wouldn't put the wrong label on the bottles. You certainly did set things humming, Miss Wentworth," he added, laughing and raising his hat.

"Wait a moment, Doctor Jenkins," persisted Joan. "I am so anxious about the doctor. He ought not to have gone; he was in no condition to go, and yet a man's life is at stake."

The doctor's face became at once impenetrable. He seemed to be on his guard against her. He seemed to know more than she, Doctor Lancaster's fiancee, knew; it was humiliating and ironical, but Joan saw that to question him, even if she had been so minded, was useless.

She was not minded. That would be a disloyal act toward her lover. Soon she would know; and meanwhile she kept down her fears. She watched Jenkins drive away with sinking heart. And somehow the morning passed.

The hours of afternoon were leaden ones. Five o'clock came at last, with no cessation of the downpour, and Joan went out and paced the rain-soaked veranda endlessly, looking anxiously in the direction of the station, though she knew that it must be at least two hours before she could hope to see Jenkins' buggy again on its way up the hill.

Through the lowering western clouds the sun, emerging for a moment, streaked the west with angry crimson splashes. Lancaster must be nearly home. But it was no use waiting there, where her fears grew from moment to moment. She went into the building, and saw the matron standing within her door. Suddenly she sensed the reflection of her own fears in Mrs. Fraser's heart; she knew the woman was doing nothing as she stood there, was waiting, like herself, and, in the same manner, hoping against hope for the doctor's safe return. Impulsively Joan entered the room. She could keep silence no longer. She broke down, sobbing distractedly.

"I am afraid something has happened to the doctor," she wept.

"Now you sit down in that chair, Miss Wentworth," said Mrs. Fraser kindly. "It's been a trying day. But Doctor Lancaster will be home in an hour, and there's no use becoming anxious about him. Heavens, if we got anxious before we had cause, what should we do?"

"I know," sobbed the girl. "But I can't bear waiting. I know something has happened to him."

"Now, my dear, you are all worked up about him," she said. "He won't come to any harm. He can't come to harm when he went straight to his own hospital," she added.

But she spoke without conviction. Joan's hysterical mood was infecting her, increasing her own fears and forebodings.

"I reckon you know, Miss Wentworth, how much Doctor Jenkins and I feel we owe to you for taking care of the doctor," she said, seating herself at the girl's side. "And for getting that man out of the place, my dear. Man? He's a devil—he's the doctor's devil, Miss Wentworth. And no harm can come to the doctor with you watching for him and praying for him."

Joan looked up at her with troubled face. "Mrs. Fraser, I am so much at a loss," she said. "Doctor Jenkins and you have known Doctor Lancaster so long, and I am a stranger here. I am like a child in comparison with you, so far as knowledge of Doctor Lancaster is concerned. I have been fighting his physical troubles, and I do not know his mental ones. That is what puts me at a loss. How can I know that Doctor Lancaster's enemies are not waiting for him, or have not hurt him?"

The matron placed her hand on the girl's knee. "Why, my dear, Doctor Lancaster has no enemies," she said. "How could such a splendid man have enemies? Of course there are troubles; who hasn't them? And it may be there's things that Doctor Jenkins and I don't know—I've thought there might be. But we've only been here three years, and that was long after the doctor's troubles began. And of course we never listened to the village gossip. But oh, Miss Wentworth, you can't imagine the sorrow in our hearts when we saw that splendid man giving way to his habit, and letting it creep over him little by little and gain the mastery.

"News" in "Newport News"

The origin of the name of the city of Newport News is uncertain. It is believed to be derived from two proper names—Newport and Newce. Captain Newport commanded the first vessel to bring immigrants to Virginia and William Newce was one of the early treasurers of the colony. John Smith wrote the latter name "Nuse."

Good Motto for Life: "Bring Out the Best"

Did you ever stop to think what kind of a woman your wife would have been if you had not asked her to marry you? Or did you ever imagine what type of man your husband would have been if you had not answered "Yes"?

Have you ever crushed any ambition, chased away any talents or driven inspiration from your household? What have you done to increase or develop your life partner's talents? Whether you are aware of it or not, you have either brought out the best side of this partner's life or buried all that was good in him or her.

A good many of us possess two sides. There are more Doctor Jekylls and Mr. Hydes in the world than we realize. How frequently your opinion of a man and some one else's do not tally! You will often say: "I can't see how Brown tolerates Jones; he's the meanest man in the world!" And yet Brown has found the better side of Jones.

Have you found the better side of your husband or wife? Have you done anything to bring that better side to the front?—Chicago Journal.

Knew All About It

"Have you heard anything about a machine for telling when a man is lying?"

"Sure."

"Ever seen one?"

"Seen one? Why, I married one!"

POULTRY

DUCK RAISING IS WORTH CONSIDERING

The average farm has all the facilities which are necessary for the raising of a goodly number of ducks and with a little outlay may add considerably to the farm income from that source.

Duck raising in some sections of the country has become a greatly specialized industry. It is hardly advisable for the average person to go into it extensively, at least not until he has become acquainted with handling ducks on a smaller scale. However, ducks do afford a side line to the regular poultry business of the farm that is worthy of the consideration of the average person.

The houses which are needed for ducks are simple affairs. They are plain and comfortable and need very little furnishings. Generally on every farm there is a small shed or building that can be used for this purpose. Warmth is not essential to the extent that is necessary with hens, but if it is dry and protected it will generally serve the purpose. Ducks should not be closely confined.

Artificial incubation and brooding are used almost entirely by the large producers of ducks, but under most farm conditions the incubation and brooding will be mostly done by hens or by ducks. Before the hens are put on the eggs and again before the ducklings are given to her she should be thoroughly dusted with insecticides. The nest should be watched for lice and treated as may be necessary.

The feed of the ducks in nature is both vegetable and animal. In the wild state they get a great deal of their food along the creeks and marshes. This type of food needs to be imitated to some extent. The duck has no crop like the chicken, the food passing directly to the gizzard and as a consequence they are not fitted for as much hard food as chickens. In fact, a large number of the professional raisers depends largely on soft foods. However, under farm conditions where the ducks have free range the problem is not so difficult and most of the additional feed will be grains. Feed that is adapted to producing growth on chickens will answer the purpose for ducklings without going to the expense and inconvenience of mixing additional rations. The main difference that will be noted by the beginner is that the ducklings make a faster growth and therefore they will consume a larger amount of food.

Sick Fowls Afterwards Are Usually Worthless

When a fowl becomes ailing and emaciated it most often denotes either a tubercular condition or coccidiosis. Such hens, should they recover, are poor layers and are apt to pass their weaknesses to their offspring. Seldom will they get well and fatten to marketable condition, so it is a money-saving method to kill and burn their carcasses.

As the majority of poultry diseases are contagious, retaining such birds menaces the present health of the flock, as well as the vigor of future ones. Often one sees an emaciated hen walking stiff-legged about a hen house. Such birds almost always die without human aid, but while alive very likely infect other fowls as well as the yard where the remainder of the flock runs. Whole flocks are often devastated through the owner's neglect of destroying worthless individual hens.

If flock owners realized that through ignoring such present menaces they are inviting weakly flocks in ensuing years, more importance would be placed on the necessity for immediately killing and burning hens or growing stock that becomes ailing, especially those which get decidedly poor in flesh, an almost unfailing tubercular indication.

Poultry Hints

Keep young stock growing.

Protect hens and young stock from the sun.

A clean, disinfected poultry house gives the laying hens a chance to do their share.

Sensible people are willing to pool their interests and co-operate in a common cause. Are farmers sensible people?

The brooder house floor should be covered with fine gravel or sand, over which is scattered a litter of alfalfa or clover leaves if available.

* * *

Proper care of the chicks during the brooding season will do much to stop up one of the important "leaks" in the poultry business.

* * *

In warm weather the hens can be dipped in a solution of sodium fluoride made by dissolving an ounce of the material in a gallon of water.

* * *

Salt in excess is poisonous to chickens. If salty water is thrown where chickens can drink it or if salt is mixed with the feed in quantity chickens may be poisoned.

* * *

Unless a hen lays from 75 to 100 eggs she is probably being kept at a loss, especially when feed prices are as high as they are at present.

* * *

The proper feeding of the young chickens makes a great deal of difference in the future profit which can be expected from the flock.

* * *

Don't leave the old litter too long in the poultry house. If you do it will cost you more in reduced egg production and possible loss of hens than several times the cost of new litter.

Claims Sure Cure for Scarlet Fever

A serum for scarlet fever has been found which will cure the most hopeless cases in 24 hours, according to Dr. Francis G. Blake, professor of medicine at the Yale Medical school, the discoverer. The serum is prepared from immunized horses, and 72 cases have been treated at the New Haven hospital, an adjunct of the Yale Medical school. The cases were classified as 43 without complications, and the remainder complicated with measles, typhoid and other diseases. In the first classification, with treatment and single serum injections, before the third day the entire group was cured, he said. In most cases within 12 hours temperature subsided to normal, the rash disappeared and an excess of anti-toxin circulated in the blood. Only one death resulted in the remaining 29 cases, all complicated and treated on various days from the third to the ninth. A child, in coma, and having typhoid and scarlet fever simultaneously, treated on the eighth day, recovered.

Man of Future to Be Practically All Brain

Two million years from now man will have a great brain, but he will be lacking in physical strength and ugly to look upon, says Prof. Conrad Theraldsen of the zoology department of Northwestern university. Several days ago the professor created a stir when he said man was not directly descended from a monkey, but that 2,000,000 years ago he was something like a cousin of the anthropoid and closely resembled him. Today Professor Theraldsen turned the picture around and looked into the future 2,000,000 years, and this is what he saw:

A big bulging head supported on a sliver-like body with short arms and legs and maybe hoofs instead of feet. There will be little use for strength in that dim period ahead, and consequently man won't have much muscle.

C. for one year, all tuition expenses free. If the club member on entering college, makes good the first year he or she is allowed free tuition the second year. Elsewhere in this issue appears a parody copied from a Hillsdale paper of long ago as to how we fight fire, and we don't blame the Hillsdale men a bit for making fun of us. We are the most asinine asses, the most incompetent jawboned baboons, the weakest kneed molly-coddles in Michigan and this is why: Thousands of dollars of the tax-payers' hard-earned money we have spent for gravel roads which serve to lead our trade to Hillsdale and no doubt will make paupers of many of our property owners, yet we have not one red cent for practical fire protection. We are up for public observation. Kick the bosoms of our trousers, please!

At the Easter Service held last Sunday morning in the Congregational church Rev. Hunt spoke on the theme "The car of Salvation," comparing the church to a trolley car. It was a very interesting subject and was very impressive. The choir rendered a beautiful anthem "Lift up your heads" and Mr. Howard Haskell played the offeratory solo. "Consider the Lilies" was the pretty Easter solo sung by Mrs. Hunt. At the invitation of the pastor for those who desired to be taken into the fellowship of the church to come forward, 15 persons responded. As they came to the altar beautifully decorated in ferns, lilies and plants Mrs. Hunt sang "Just As I Am Thine Own To Be." The baptismal service followed and Rev. Hunt extended the hand of fellowship to them all after which the "Sacrament of the Lord's Supper" was observed. At the Sunday school hour a very good program which had been prepared by Mr. Holcomb was enjoyed. "The Maker of Men" which was shown at the evening service was said by all who saw it to be the best picture they had ever seen. A very impressive lesson was brought out to all who saw it. The church was well filled at all services.

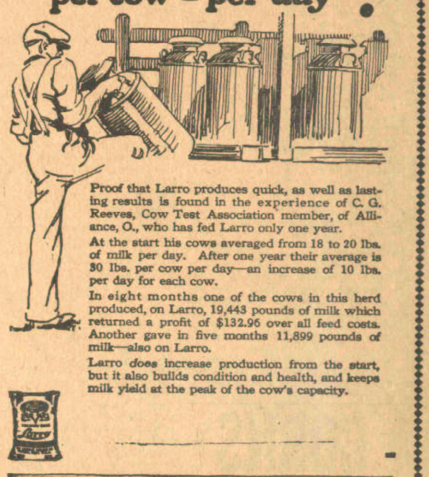
10 lbs. more!
per cow – per day



Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

70 Miles of Ruberoid!

The illustration shows the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, England, where 70 miles of Ruberoid Roofing were used on more than 150 buildings.

Ruberoid was selected only after the architects and contractors had conducted exhaustive tests to determine the most suitable roofing from the standpoint of appearance, reliability, cost, and weather and fire resistance.

Ruberoid was the only prepared roofing used for permanent or semi-permanent buildings, including the Fine Arts Palace, which houses an art collection of incalculable value.

The confidence of the architects was completely justified when, during May, a record rainfall of 93 tons per acre deluged the Exposition and the Ruberoid Roofs kept the buildings absolutely dry.

There is a Ruberoid Roofing for every building. Come in or phone us today for samples and descriptive folders.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.
